Making a Garden of Eden for Game

William T. Hornaday,
Director New York Zoological Park

The Big Natural Park That has Been Set Aside in British Columbia

TODAY, in the early spring, a strange and beautiful stillness, instinct with the first sweet breaths of the season's matings, has fallen upon many miles of mountain and valley in the East-Kootenay district of British Columbia.

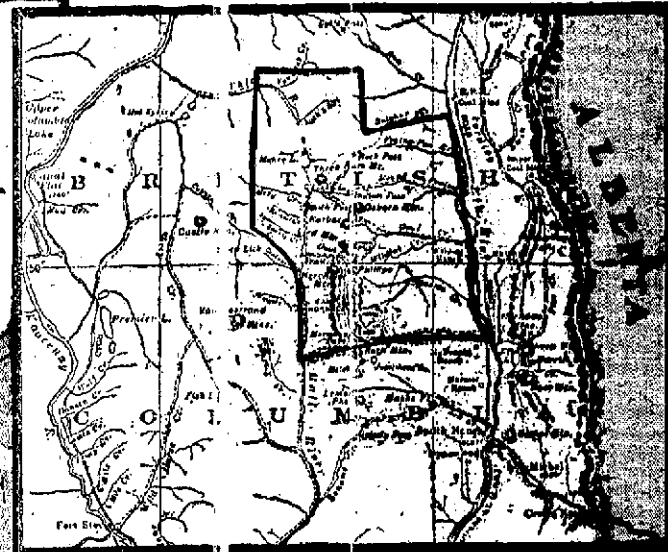

It is a new Eden, created by man's fiat—an Eden for the fast-disappearing big game of the continent. In existence since November 15 of last year, the animal's paradise has come through the Canadian winter in unwonted freedom from the deadly rifle shot, the grizzlies and the mountain goats scarcely trusting to their senses for assurance of their strange immunity, not yet realizing the boon of happiness that has been vouchsafed them.

For ten years to come that natural game preserve, embracing 450 square miles, is by law to remain inviolate from man's wanton slughters. For ten years those noble denizens of the wild are to live and bring forth their kind under the conditions their unknown prototypes enjoyed—even before the Indians hunted them.

To all decent sportsmen, the thought of that great preserve will be a source of was practicing the moderation he was preparing himself to urge.

It became obvious, as he learned his subject more thoroughly, that mere moderation, even in that generously stocked natural preserve, must prove ineffectual, so long as the Canadian laws remained so lax and so long as any shooting at all was permitted where it was most easy to find game.

In the United States, with its thousands of men of means looking to the wilderness for either health or trophies—but usually for both—there was already a potential multitude preparing for the work of complete extermination, the numbers of those joining in it being steadily on the increase.

In Canada there was not only the sporting class frequently recruited by Englishmen who deemed their lives misspent unless they had done big game shooting at least once before they died, but the local population, in whom the feeling that they were the heirs of the wild and all that it contained was almost as strong as the sentiment of squatter sovereignty which recently turned into a battleground Reelfoot Lake, in Tennessee.

WAS BEING "SHOT OUT"

Above all, the country round about was being "shot out," leaving only the great, central, natural zoo as the source of any future supply of big game for the entire province of British Columbia.

Mr. Phillips realized that the sole way to save it was through the prompt creation of a public opinion, amply enlightened as to existing conditions and thoroughly warned as to the disastrous future.

He disclosed what he had learned to William T. Hornaday, director of the New York Zoological Park, whose record in the past had made him the natural ally of all the wild animals in the world.

Mr. Hornaday has hunted in practically every field, from Canada to India, with the one exception of Africa. He is president of the American Bison Society, vice president of the League of American Sportsmen and other bodies, and an honorary member of the British Society for the Preservation of the Wild Fauna of the Empire.

It was Dr. Hornaday who founded the National Zoo at Washington, the National Collection of Heads and Horns, the Wichita and Montana National Bison Ranges, and the Campfire Club of New York, of which he is president.

In him Mr. Phillips found a tower of strength. He was the war horse of game preservation, and the first sniff of the glorious battle against "The Spoilers," as Dr. Hornaday calls all heedless sportsmen, as well as "game hogs," was the breath of new life to him.

East Kootenay didn't appeal to them then in the light of an Eden. It was rather an ark of safety amid the increasing deluge of shot. Now, instead of one Noah, it had two.

ENLISTED SPORTSMEN'S AID

Dr. Hornaday, author of a number of books and known to all decent sportsmen and many statesmen the world over, charged himself chiefly with the literary campaign. Mr. Phillips, veteran hunter and local expert, undertook a comprehensive survey which should provide data absolutely irrefragable. Together they made the formal suggestion to the government of British Columbia in 1908, after a joint study of the conditions on the ground.

They enlisted the active support of such well-known sportsmen of Victoria as Warburton Pike and Clive Phillips-Wolley. Some of the leading citizens of Fernie, the town nearest Goat Mountain Park, as they designated the area for convenient reference, came to their aid, among the local allies being the Mayor, W. W. Tuttle; Hon. W. R. Moss, M. P., and J. B. Turney. Things looked very promising.

But the modern Noahs had to learn for themselves the lesson that if a new prophet were to arise with a sure plan for the millennium his plan might be absolutely flawless, but the jealousies and envies of humanity would try to make it inoperative. Before long, there arose an opposition party vehement in its declaration that while the reserve ought to be created, some of the important lands, near Fernie, should be omitted and the northern boundaries extended.

Then, too, the publicity essential to the movement instantly fixed upon this previously unknown shooting ground the attention of many "sportsmen" who saw a chance to do wholesale slaughter before the game could be protected in the slow course of legislation. No fewer than unfailing satisfaction; but to the people of the United States generally it must be a source of unfeigned pride, for it is the outcome of the unselfish, indefatigable efforts of two Americans, John M. Phillips, of Pittsburg, and Dr. William T. Hornaday, director of the New York Zoological Society.

SOLELY for the welfare of the wild, waging a long and difficult campaign in a foreign country, foregoing the richest find of game sportsmen ever discovered, these two Americans carried to complete victory their generous fight to give Canada and the continent another Yellowstone, another breeding place for the game otherwise doomed to speedy extinction.

Had their motive been anything but absolutely unselfish, perhaps even if they had been Canadian, their generous undertaking must have failed.

The Canadian people, inheriting a territory greater in extent than the United States, still settling their vast region so sparsely that the explorer has big tasks before him and the pioneer is a familiar figure of the expanding civilization, have not yet realized that there can be a limit to their primal wildernesses and the game they shelter.

Hunting laws, absurdly lavish of permissions in the eyes of American game experts who have studied the actual conditions, invite sportsmen, wanton and selfish, to shoot, with the wholesale modern weapons, as wastefully as though the French were just founding Quebec.

Seven years ago Mr. Phillips, one of the real sportsmen this country holds, penetrated into the East-Kootenay district and learned, from his own observation, the abundance of great game permanently resident there. He noted that, because of the peculiar topography of the country, many varieties remained all the year around within an area comparatively circumscribed, their winter and summer feeding grounds being so little separated that the district formed a veritable Eden.

He returned, again and again, as the seasons passed, to note that man, as truly as nature had provided the Eden, was persistently playing havoc with it.

The magnificent elk and the splendid mule deer, members most prized by hunters of the numerous deer family, were all but exterminated. Canada had awakened tardily to the value of her elk and had more tardily passed a law protecting them. But here, in the very heart of lands that were their natural breeding place, both species were on the verge of extinction by Canadian and American hunters who had neither mercy in their hearts for the harmless creatures nor intelligence in their brains for the safeguarding of the future.

The wonderful mountain goats and sheep, the East Kootenay heights their native refuge, still survived in large numbers; but already it was the fashion with wealthy sportsmen to demand of their guides a shot at a pair of horns to grace a library or hall, purely because they were supposed to be hard to get—as they were, elsewhere.

Mr. Phillips, equipped with his hunting license and his high-powered rifle, could do his share to decimate that Eden and leave it barren of game for all time to come. But, as time went on and he saw with his own eyes how those high hills and plateaus were so rapidly becoming the last haven of the persecuted beasts of wood and field, he realized that, as a decent sportsman, both his sensibility and his prudence laid upon him a duty which it would be shameful to neglect.

His expeditions into the East Kootenay district assumed more and more the character of explorations; and, with the mountain goats and sheep all around him, his license in his pocket and his rifle in his hand, he limited himself to three-fifths of the game allowed him in one season, and to only a single grizzly in another. DRAWING BY
ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

It is shown a scientific representation of what man looked like 20,000 years ago.

Fragments of the latest discovery of a prehistoric skull in France were submitted to the eminent French archaeologist, M. Marcelin Boule, director of the laboratory of paleontology of the Paris Museum, who, aided by artists, has reconstructed with the utmost exactitude just what man really looked like 20,000 years ago.

For the last fifty years geology and archaeology have been in strict accord trying to push back the limits of knowledge regarding human origin. The greatest discovery of the age is that made recently at La Chapelle-Aux-Saints in France, of a prehistoric skull, declared to be the most ancient in the world, and although in fragments it was the complete. There is shown in the illustration a life-sized reproduction of the skull, and the drawing of reconstructions made by a famous artist under the direction of scientists of how the man looked whose skull was dug up.

It is of great interest at this time to review some of the results obtained in paleontology. The very incomplete fossils unearthed during the last century have proved but little, says the Illustrated London News.

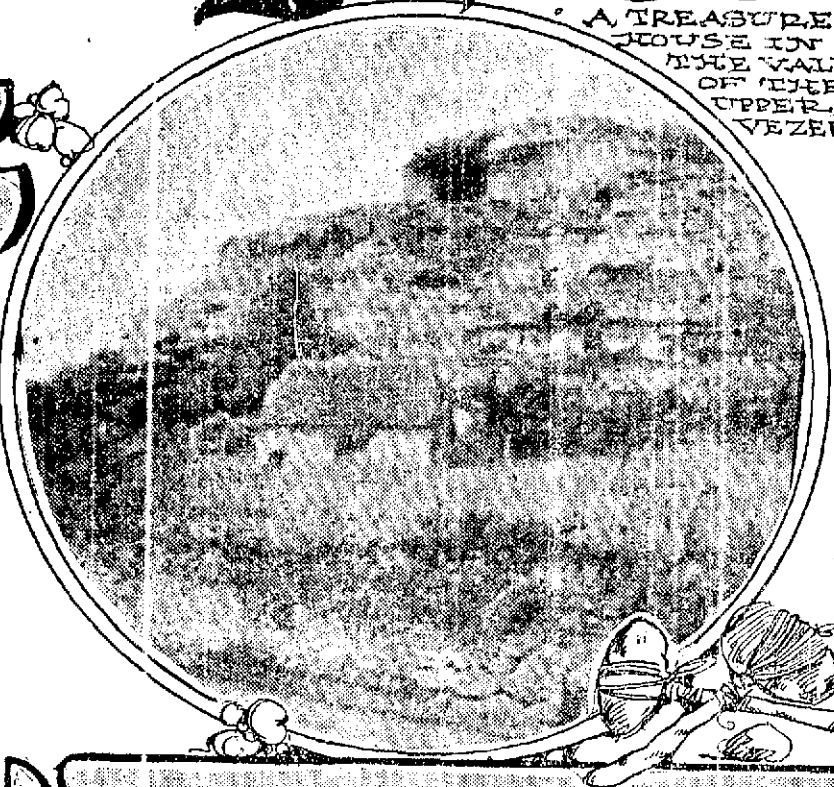

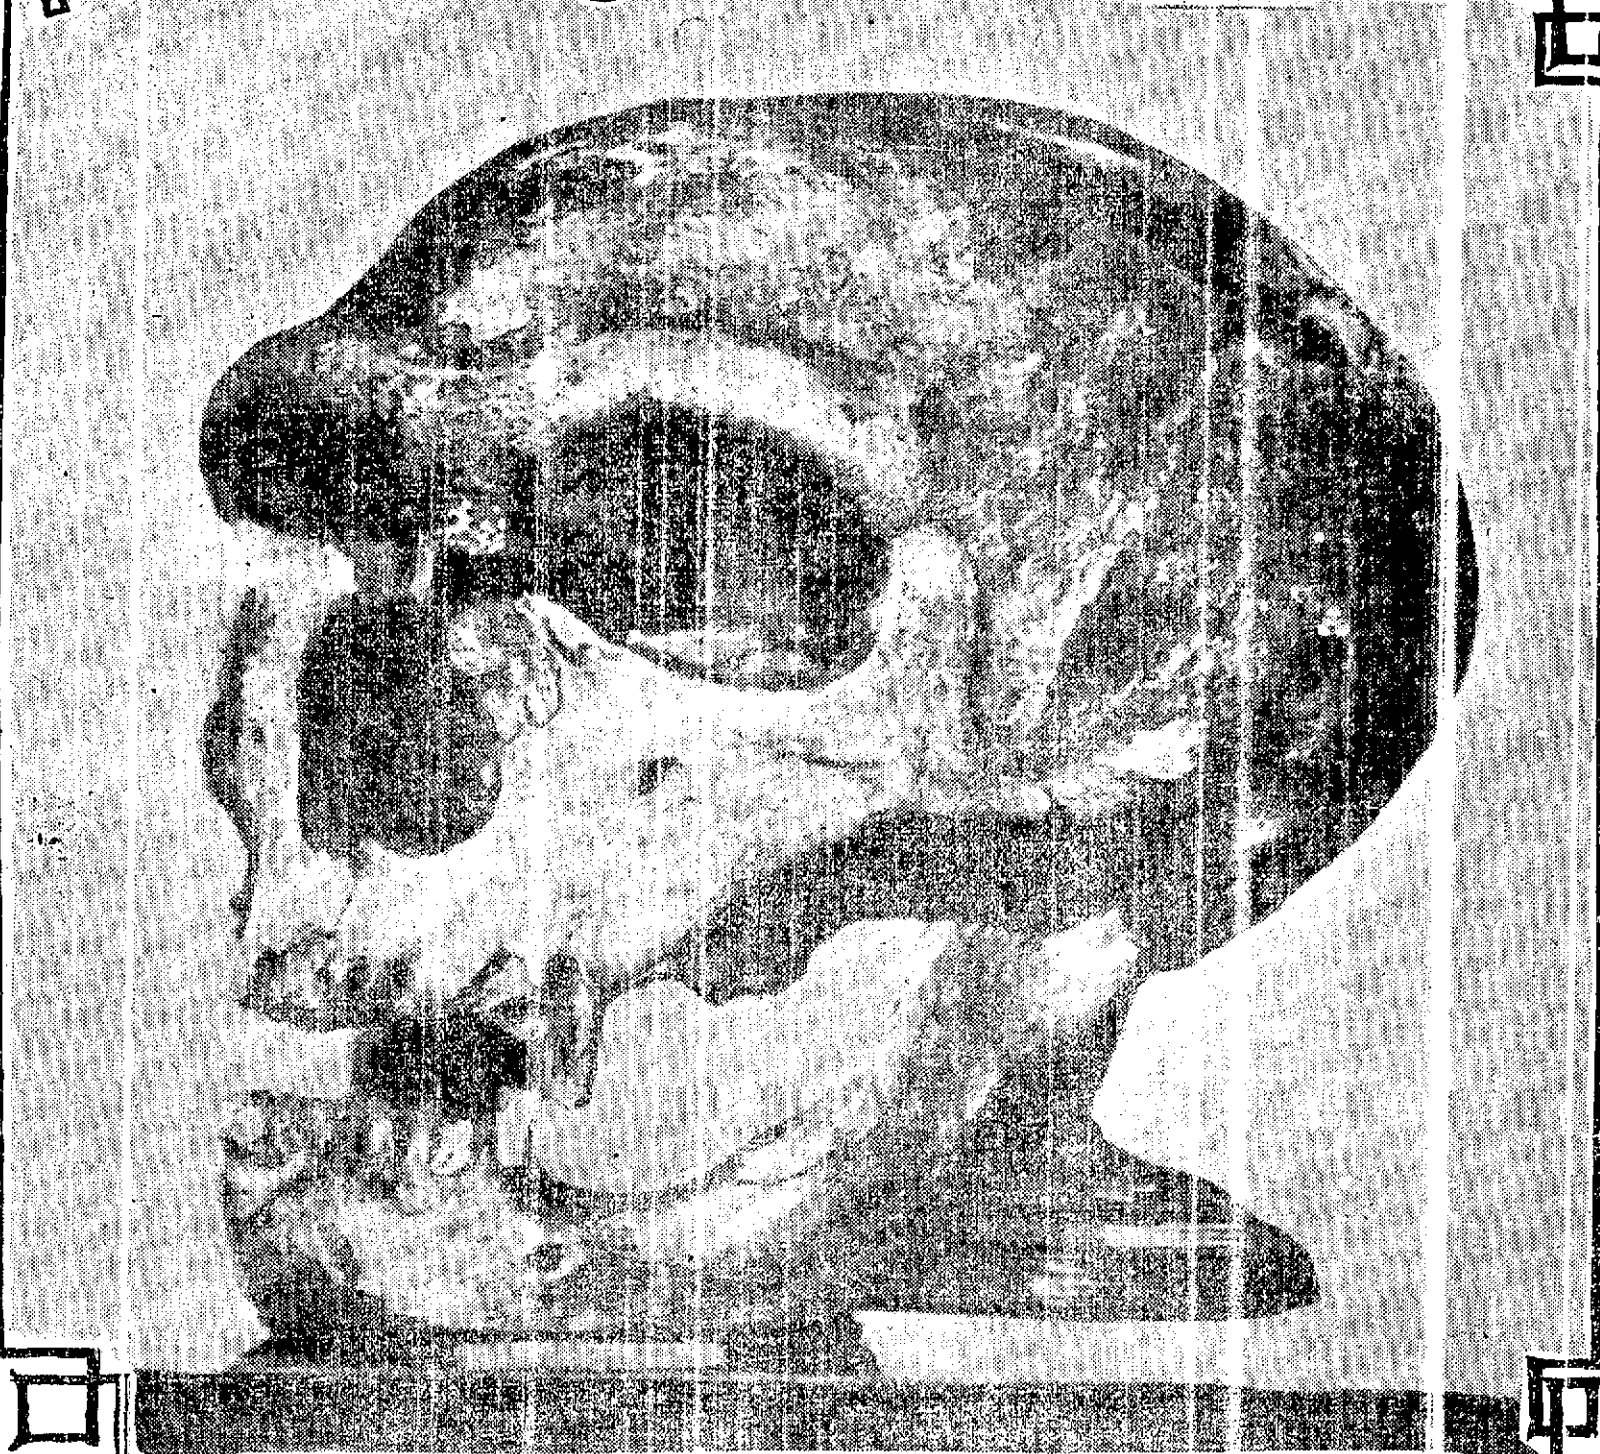

The first in discovery is the skull of Neanderthal, discovered in Germany in 1856, a few years before the publication of Darwin's famous work on "The Origin of Species."

Of the skull those remained only the cranium, very much flattened, with the eyebrows almost as developed as those of anthropoid apes; the face was missing. According to Virchow it was the skull of a sick man; others said it was that of an idiot. Thirty years later, in 1886, two professors of Liege, Fraipont and Lohet, discovered at Spy, in Belgium, two skulls similar to the preceding, and accompanied by the fragments of a skeleton. These fragments suggested bipeds able to adopt a crouching attitude. The skulls (save that one of them had a part of the maxillary bone) lacked a face, like that of Neanderthal, and they remained equally enigmatical. Two points only were established: These skulls had been skinned from the Neanderthal ground; there were therefore, contemporary with primitive man; while, on the other hand, their cerebral capacity brought them far nearer to man than to the apes. That capacity was about 1300 cubic centimetres. Now, the mean human capacity is 1500; it reaches 1800 in certain exceptional beings (for instance, Cuvier and Lord Byron) and is as little as 1400 among the lowest types of Australopithecus. The maximum observed among the anthropomorphic apes is 600.

Leaving aside other discoveries of a similar order, we now come to the sensational exhibition of the Pithecanthropus, discovered in Java in 1891 by a Dutchman, Dr. Dubois. He brought to Europe a cranium, according to him, belonging to a type intermediate between man and the ape. A year later, and 15 metres away from the spot where he had picked up his fossil, Dr. Dubois found two other crania, one male and a female which seemed to be human. He thought these bones might be regarded as belonging to the same individual as the skull, and he reconstructed a kind of ape which he called Pithecanthropus, and whom he considered to be an ancestor of man. This creature figured in the Paris exhibition of 1905. The anthropologists regard it variously as a very superior ape, or an inferior man, and they are still discussing the age of the stratum in which it was discovered.

In the midst of these doubts the skull from Chapelle-Aux-Saints provides us

HOUSE WITH TUNNELS

Cleveland's queer old secret tunnels, built sixty or seventy years ago, and leading from one of Cleveland's oldest residences to artificial caves in the hills above the Cuyahoga river, have been discovered in the demolition of the old W. J. Gordon home. The tunnels had existed for decades unknown to people who have lived in the neighborhood for fifty or sixty years. Rumor and mystery surround their early creation and use and many quaint traditions are connected with them. When workmen began tearing the house down many unexpected queer things were discovered. It was found that the house was divided into three separate compartments and that it was impossible to get from one section to the other without going outdoors or through one of the tunnels to the big stone barn in the rear, where passageways led to the other divisions of the old house. Secret stairways and hidden closets abounded throughout the building and were located on every floor, near cabinets being found even in the rear kitchen.

The old house was built seventy years ago by W. J. Gordon, a wholesale liquor dealer for many years, and the man who later gave Gordon Park to the city. The ground was torn down from the hillside to the shore below, and on this hillside the tunnels emerged into the light through a big artificial cave, made with pieces of brick fitted and slightly arched to form a supporting roof.

Many Clevelanders will remember that many years ago a rocky ridge of volcanic design stood in the rear of the Gordon home, which was surrounded by a big brick wall. It was at the foot of this rocky ridge that the entrance to the tunnels was concealed by vines which grew in profusion. Near the artificial cave is a large underground cellar, also secured with a rockery. It is arched with brick and has no openings, except the door, which was of oak set in the rockery vault. The main tunnel from the cave led to the barn, fifty or sixty feet away. This barn had a basement and tunnels led to the three compartments of the house.

It is understood that the tunnels were built at the time the place was constructed. The house was one of the first residences in Cleveland when built, and stood in the most fashionable section of the city. The most probable explanation, according to men who knew W. J. Gordon, is that the builder of the old home had a hobby for tunnels and ruins. At that time it was not unusual to embellish estates in this way, and many land stave owners of that time, though none as elaborate as those at the old Gordon residence.

It is curious that while so much has been written in our language on snake bites there has been comparatively little placed on record concerning the stings of fishes. Snake bites are rare in this country, but fish stings are very common, especially among fishermen and fishermen. The fishes that most often sting are the great and little weathers. A prick on the hand or foot from a weather causes much swelling and inflammation. If the arm is affected the inflammation may spread to the shoulder, the swelling of the whole limb being enormous. The pain is agonizing, the patient often falling into a state of collapse or becoming delirious. Usually the inflammation subsides in about three days, followed by desquamation.

at last with precise data, which M. Boule has elucidated with a judgment equal to his erudition. The village of La Chapelle-Aux-Saints is situated in the department of Corrèze, twenty-two kilometers south of Brive, on the borders of the department of Lot.

It was in the department of the Dordogne bordering on Corrèze, on the banks of the Vézère, that the famous caves of the Eyzies were discovered, the walls of which are decorated with designs that go back as far as the reindeer age. Quite near the Eyzies is the cave of La Vache, where they have lately excavated a skull of which we shall speak presently.

The skull of La Chapelle-Aux-Saints was also found in a cave at a depth of sixty centimetres. From the golden section of the ground where it was discovered, and from examination of the early flints and the bones of animals, reindeer and bison, gathered near the human bones, it follows that these latter belong to the same period as the skulls of Neanderthal and Spy, namely, the Mousterian epoch.

At the same time that the skull was found at La Chapelle-Aux-Saints a Swiss geologist, M. de la Harpe, discovered in the valley of the Vézère a fossil skeleton also belonging to the Mousterian epoch, and the skull of which is very similar to that of the Chapelle-Aux-Saints, but for less complexities. The human bones, it follows that these latter belong to the same period as the skulls of Neanderthal and Spy, namely, the Mousterian epoch.

ning. The pretty home was the scene of merriment and mirth when a party of young friends of Miss Helen McBrearty, gathered for the evening. Green decorations were used throughout the house, and the young people made merry with song and dance in honor of old Kilbride. Capt. Dargatz added much to the merriment of the evening with a couple of well rendered songs, and an elaborate supper, humor and wit and merry jokes and toasts caused the time to pass rapidly. The members of the Starlight Yacht Club sang several of their pretty club songs. Those present were: Mr. and Mrs. David L. ## MAKING A GARDEN OF EDEN FOR GAME

Twenty-five men appeared to Dr. Hornaday himself for instructions as to the best way to set their guns into action, and, as we say all he could, at least a couple of them did reach the ground and took their toll of victims.

Most fortunately for their magnificent campaign, neither Mr. Phillips nor Mr. Hornaday was a Canadian. As men whose motives were unimpeachable, they were above all the suspicions which commonly attach self-interest to many enterprises wholly right-minded. Their hands were strengthened by editorial articles which, during their campaign, appeared in British publications.

After more than a year of education of the public and of infinite tact in handling the rivalries that had fastened on the movement, the so many poison pills they brought to the stage where Frederick McBride, of British Columbia, was convinced of the general desire that a reserve should be established. He presented the subject to A. Bryan Williams, the provincial game warden, who last year made two fabulous tours through the last Kootenay region, from Fernie to the White River country.

No more reliable measure of the value of this newly-made Eden can be given than the words of Dr. Hornaday when he says:

"It is reasonably certain that in the whole of the great mountain regions of southern British Columbia there can be found no equal area, which is at once so finely equipped with picturesque mountains and valleys, so richly stocked with game, and so admirably situated for the purpose of a game preserve."

Like the pages of some beautifully illustrated natural history of geology, zoology and botany combined are the mountain sides. Nature is busy at work in

THE LITTLE JOURNEYS OF NIP AND TUCK

1. Nip and Tuck have spent a week on milky way, and fat and sleek
They bid good-bye and take on board ice cream and milk, a goodly hoard
"So, farewell, king and milky men," and off the auship goes again.

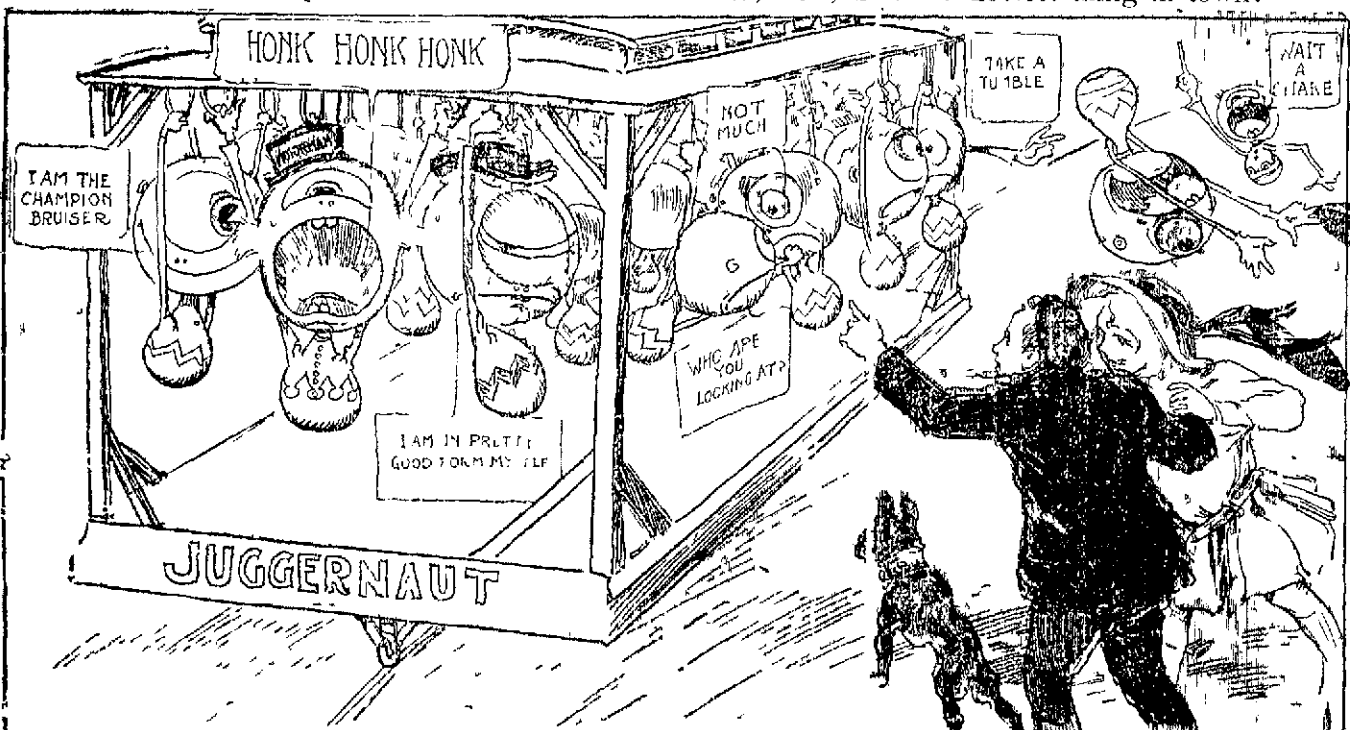

2. Off in the distant hazy stars their eyes beheld the planet Mars,
Where people cannot sleep at night, for all the neighbors do is fight.
Of martial ardor you have heard? Well, Mars is sponsor for the word.

3. When they arrived they found 'twas true. 'Twas all the people had to do
Old women from the house-tops shout and knock each other down and out.
With chips on shoulders men went 'round, 'Oh, I'm the hottest thing in town!'

4. The children loved the Martian most, far more than martial talk and boast,
The wondrous shape the Martians had, the big and little, good and bad
All had no feet but one big eye, a monstrous brain, oh me oh my!

5. A passing street car they did hail, a funny car ran on one rail.
(I told you Martians had no feet) they hung by straps, there was no seat
They wore their legs out long ago—they had to stand so much, you know.

6. The same thing happens in our town; get on a car, go up or down,
You'll have to stand, can't find a seat, you have to stand upon your feet.
They'll wither up and waste away We'll be like Martian folks some day.

THE SMARTEST FASHIONS OF WELL DRESSED FOLK

A Spring Afternoon

DEAREST MARGIE:
After church yesterday I took a little walk in the park all by myself, just for the pleasure of looking at the people who passed me and thinking about what they did when they got home, what kind of people they were and what sort of lives they led. Of course, as you no doubt know, I was also interested in what kind of clothes they wore, for I don't think a woman exists who could pass another and not have it once enter her head to wonder how she herself compared with the other woman. It was a lovely afternoon, and I walked and walked, so that it was after sundown when I reached home.

I saw some lovely costumes while strolling along, and the two which stuck mostly in my mind, and which I find easiest to describe to you, were certainly well worth the discovery. One was worn by a fascinating blonde, who seemed to be enjoying the playful winds of March, in spite of the fact that her hat was—well, one would not call it small. But to return to her suit. It was of tobacco brown broadcloth, with wide, rounded revers, which extended almost to the waist line, where the coat was held together with a single button. Her skirt was evidently high waisted, although there was no sign of the waist line, visible, and her blouse was of soft white tulle, with a jabot of the same held in place by a black bow. The revers of the coat matched the skirt, except they were of silk, and had every here and there a line of black. Her hat was of soft, pliable straw of mushroom shape with a tam-o'-shanter crown, and it was trimmed in the front with two large green wings held in place by the slightest touch of brick red—altogether the most admirable arrangement.

The girl who was with this blonde beauty was dressed in a suit of mode gray. The coat was worn over a white net waist with a tucked net yoke, had a shawl collar, and was held in place by three buttons exactly over the bust. Her hat was of the flower-pot variety, very high of crown and very narrow of brim, with a broad black velvet ribbon laced through the straw, and a group of pink roses on the right side. It was just the sort of hat that would attract one's attention, yet there was nothing about it that was unbecoming or inartistic.

Another attractive girl I saw was gowned in a simple blue cashmere, with a yoke and band of gold embroidery across the front. Her hat of blue was trimmed with black wings, and the crown was bound with gold. With her she had the most fascinating little girl, who wore a white dress and a dark blue coat with an ecru collar, and a blue bow of ribbon in her hair. Her dress was of plain white linen with a brown leather belt, so that she was properly dressed both for day and hour. A small boy, evidently her brother, who was with her, wore one of the newest fads in children's clothes, with a red refter over a white linen suit and a red tam-o'-shanter. He was a good-looking little chap, and his Buster Brown hair gave him a mischievous air that was most attractive.

Your affectionate sister,

ELEANOR.

THE beautiful young women who are clerks in the department stores in Oakland are a necessary acquisition to the attractiveness of the establishments, declare the heads of the various concerns. Nothing is more pleasing to the stranger who is sight-seeing in a city store than to behold a bevy of striking maids and matrons, who by their bright and intelligent faces charm the visitors. One can hardly resist admiring the cheerful manner in which they attend to the wants of the shoppers. No one is overlooked by them. The rich and the poor are treated with the utmost courtesy by the fair salespeople. The beautiful sales ladies engaged in the stores of this city have added dignity and character to the establishments which they represent. By their refinement they have contributed much toward raising the standard of the working girls of today in the estimation of the public. Since women have occupied positions in the stores they have had their sympathies and ideals broadened and their beauty strengthened by contact with the world. Many beautiful women have never had an opportunity of working in a store and only crave for employment of that nature.

Credit is due the beautiful and vivacious women for distinguishing themselves in respect to their genuine courtesy and kindness to all strangers. Never in the history of this city were there so many splendid types of womanhood seen as there is today in the department stores of Oakland.

Among the attractive women are Miss Bessie Layton, Miss Martha Ledene, Miss G. Coffey, Miss A. Von Dorn, Miss Mary Keller, Miss Appel, Miss M. Prentice and Miss Vasey.

The BUSINESS GUEST

Deirdre of Personal Appearance

Meet the Shock with a Smiling Face

He informs you through the telephone

JOHN MILTON was not happy in his married life. From what his biographers hint, rather than assert, we gather that Mistress Mary was, "a simple and apparently stupid girl, accustomed to dance with officers at home," soon wearied of quiet, humdrum life she led with her husband, and after provoking a storm of rebuke from her father, she fled to her old home, under the wing of her parents, and finally to return to John's household very much as she pleased her father. When she did come back, we are told plainly that she is more of a hindrance than a help to the student; that one reason for this was that she crowded his house with her own friends and kindred, and paid scant attention to his erudite associates. As we well see, then, that recollections of her unsatisfied desires by the force of contrast helped him to paint the picture of the first garden party of which we have any record. Saying the majestic angel through the vista of trees, and divining that he would shortly visit him, he ordered his spouse inconspicuously to hasten herself to get ready a luncheon worthy of Eve, and the celestial stranger. Eve's ready promise to—

"Taste, and from each hough and brake,
Each plant and junclet found, to pluck such choice
To entertain our angel guest, as he,
Rejoicing, shall confess that I, his God,
Hath honored his bounties as in heaven."

has stood for over two centuries as a model example for the housewife whose husband, without or with warning, brings home a Business Guest to partake of her hospitality.

A more authentic instance of early and gracious hospitality in like circumstances is the beautiful story of Abraham's entertainment of the three men who appeared to him as he sat in his tent door under the oak of Mamre in the heat of the day. After seating them in the grateful shade and offering water to wash their tired and dusty feet, he sped him to Scran and made her with patriarchal imperiousness:

"Make ready quickly" (the original means in modern English: "And be quick about it") "three measures of meal, knead it, and make cakes upon the hearth."

"POT-LUCK"

Sarah, we know, was a bit and not a little bit of a victim on her own account, yet she obeyed her lord's behest with as cheerful alacrity as the chief wife of the Hebrew sheik at whose tent door we alighted when noon was high and hot over the plains of Jericho.

Oriental hospitality was as punctilious as upon householders and tent dwellers now as when the poet to the Gentiles admonished his converts not to be unkindful to entertain strangers, adding for their encouragement: "Some have thus entertained angels unawares."

If the housewife is disposed to cavil at the length of this preamble, I hasten to remind her that few of the happenings of domestic life vex the anxious soul more sorely than the coming of a guest to dinner, or to spend the night. It falls out, in the natural process of things, that the guest who is not a friend and barely an acquaintance appears upon the scene at the most inopportune season for the family comfort, that reminiscence adds gloom to anticipation. The fact that John—the very embodiment of gentle consideration for her convenience and happiness—couldn't get out of asking the man "Chicago or Atlanta or Montreal" "put-in" with his family does not abate the nuisance. You may be fairly certain in the depths of your conscience that John had some irrefragable reason for imposing the alien guest into the peaceful domestic brew, for he loves his home and enjoys an uninterrupted evening in the bosom of his family as much as most men enjoy their clubs. I doubt if the best wife who ever lived and respected her husband as the wisest of men, fully appreciated the business expediency of asking "a man" home to dinner, even though his wife may not quite approve of the polite measure.

In our gossip of Eden and Manne we made clear the point that the angels who dropped in, unexpectedly, were Business Guests. Also, that the choicest dainties of Paradise and the quick leaves and the roast you were made ready and pressed upon the strangers before the hosts had an inkling of the purpose of that business. I did not say this in jest. There are lessons to be learned from every page of Holy Writ. The Martha of the twentieth century may sit at shrewish Sarah's feet and learn of her here.

I know (nobody better) what a jar to the orderly routine of the day is the unlooked-for apparition of the afore-said "man." I recall dreadful moments when he was three men. Do not smile when I say that the thought of this three who "looked in" upon Abraham, resting after a hot day's work—perhaps doing—in the tent door, came to me with leading in the wings. I would not be outdone in philosophic composure by Sarah!

Coming to close quarters with the tent—here is where "The Emergency Shift," of which we talked last year, is a stay and a solace. Without stopping to pry into the secret causes of the unlooked-for appearance of the Business Guest with the infrequent assignment of cold corned beef to the place of honor on the menu, if the meal be luncheon or supper, or the second day's appearance of the guest (warned up, or down?) which you and the cook decided would just "do" for the family proper, or the more mysterious fact that the most important "man" for whom John would have you and the home show at their best, inevitably shows up on washing or ironing day—let us reason together regarding the manner in which the hostess should be met. Before we attack the "shift," put yourself in John's place from the moment he informs you through the telephone that he has asked a business friend from out of town to dine or sup or lunch with him. The telephone booth being soundless and discreet, he deprecates the incessantly confidential, and hopes—surely, that it won't throw you out in the least. If he have the habit of talking over business with you, he adds a hurried abstract of the imperative circumstances which have urged him to this step without consulting you. He knows from past experiences how nobly you rise to the situation, etc., etc., at catera.

Putting yourself in his place, justify all that he says of yourself. Bid him bring his Man along and to rest confidently in the persuasion that you will do your best at such short notice.

Cold corned beef—cold corned beef! Nevertheless, it may be made a shade less plebeian by the accompanying sauce of grated horseradish beaten to a cream with a little white of egg, and the slices may be lapped symmetrically over another on the dish and garnished with celery tops or parsley. Baked potatoes—preferably sweet—go well with the meat, and require in preparation beyond washing and wiping. Baked cream (last is another good improvisation). Begin the luncheon with sandwiches. Serve with them brown bread cut thin and buttered and pass sliced lemon with the sandwiches. The meat and vegetable and the dish of steaming hot cream toast come next. Then cake and home-made canned fruit from the "shelf." Hot, creamy cream should go ground with the cake. If you have time and opportunity to get left over for a salad, you give a touch of elegance to the meal without much expense. Season with a French dressing and pass heated crackers and cheese with it. It should immediately precede the sweet.

This schedule is designed as a suggestion of what may be done at short notice to alter the character of a luncheon. It is not likely in this age of telephones and well-trained husbands that you will not have an hour's notice of the attention to your family group. Should the business guest be picked up on the way up-town and introduced to you unceremoniously, meet the shock with a smiling face, and make up by a cordial welcome for any deficiencies in the menu.

DOVER ALICE GIZZE

Excuses and flurries accentuate bluntness and do not engender charitable judgment. On the contrary, the stranger is led to the conclusion that you are careless of John's everyday comfort. Stand fast by the rule which every wife should make at the outset of her housewifely life, namely, that what is good enough for her husband is good enough for any other man. The clean and smooth tablecloth should be a matter of principle shining silver and unbroken china, bright glass and clean napkins are the honest due of the man whose labor supplies the means to keep the house "going." Study for him the pleasures of table appointments and the fitness of personal appearance.

AN HONORED GUEST

"I have been married forty years," I heard a white-haired lover-husband say, "in all that time I have never seen my wife sit down to a meal. I have always been asked to sit down. And I have never been ashamed to sit down for any other man. The clean and smooth tablecloth should be a matter of principle shining silver and unbroken china, bright glass and clean napkins are the honest due of the man whose labor supplies the means to keep the house 'going.' Study for him the pleasures of table appointments and the fitness of personal appearance."

THE HOUSEMOTHERS' EXCHANGE

I HAVE a beautiful point face handkerchief that was blued not much in the wash. I have washed it several times since then, but it is still a solid blue. Can anything be done to whiten it? MISSOURI (Olemiss, Mo.)

Make boiling water quite sour with cream of tartar, and soak the handkerchief in it. Leave it thus for three hours, then lay in the sun and wet hourly with the acid water. Rinse at night and lay in lipped milk until morning. This will not injure the handkerchief, but will abolish the violet blue.

Returning Favors

So many good things come to me through the Exchange that it seems to me more than fitting that I should make some return. I condensed milk may be used in all kinds of cooking. We have certain unsweetened brands here which are yet manufactured in the East. By using twice as much water as cream from the can you get a rich milk. I have never tried to whip it. If "Young Housekeeper" wishes to have my address, I will gladly tell her the name of the brand we have used successfully for five years. It keeps sweet longer than the fresh milk from the cow.

Apply with a fine paint brush.

Mrs. W. E. P. (Los Angeles, Cal.)

Our California contingent grows stronger and more helpful as the weeks roll on. The address of this correspondent is at the service of the member whose query has drawn out this letter.

Treating Hardwood Floors

A correspondent asked lately for a remedy for a sticky hardwood floor which had been treated with boiled oil and paraffine. There should have been a good supply of some patent drier added to the oil. And I should not have hinted the oil. One may use any kind of stain to add to it—light and dark oak, black walnut, etc. It comes out in cans.

I have had some experience in painting. As this floor was not treated in the way I have spoken of at first, I am sure that a half of strong ether vinegar applied with a cloth would remove the stickiness and leave as nice a surface as could be desired.

I hasten to write this, thinking it may save the perplexed woman much trouble. I had the same trouble with some chairs some years ago, and the vinegar set all right again.

I have a query: "How may I prevent my jelly from candying?"

A day or two after making jelly I cut the pieces a little larger than the squares, dip them in alcohol and fit on the surface of the jelly. Then I cover them with melted paraffine. This last may be saved and used several times. My jelly never candies. I do not keep it in the cellar, but in an upper room.

Here is a recipe for a good hard soap:

Put five pounds of grease over the fire, and if it melts stir in a quarter of a pound of borax. When this is dissolved and the grease is a little more than lukewarm, turn in the lye slowly, a cup of salt and wash dissolved in a quart and a pint of salt water. Stir steadily until all the lye is dissolved and thoroughly incorporated, and you have a smooth, thick mass. Turn into molds, and when firm these should be cut into cakes.

I read in your paper some months ago that a white penny with an eagle on it of the date 1857 is worth $1. I have several of these, and I should like to realize something on them.

Mrs. H. T. P. (Sanquett, N. Y.)

Your query respecting the odd penny is referred to our unimpaired experts, of whom we have a goodly number on our list.

May I ask if you have a good recipe for nice toilet soap? We have frequent inquiries for it. Home-made soap would seem to have come well to the front of the estimation of our housewifely mothers. For a long time nobody thought of making soap for home comfort. We believed that we could buy better than we could make, and buy better than we could make. What had wrought the change?

Wants a Poem

This is hardly a theme for the Exchange, perhaps. Yet I, as a housemother, may profit by the reply, as I will prove presently. Have you or your readers anywhere in your scrapbooks a poem entitled "Home by Heart," author unknown? It was the greatest imaginable comfort to me, and my girl lost it for me. I want it again. If anyone that if that were to lay burdens upon us all at once we could not have them; but it is a little more than home, and we are thus enabled to carry them.

It ends thus:

"We have the burden of the heart."

Will you put a "shell" in the paper for it? I cut it out of an old magazine, and did not really appreciate it until I read it. And then it was lost.

Mrs. J. H. J. (Staple City, S. D.)

I fully appreciate your desire to regain possession of the verses, each of our treasures some choice bit of rhyme or prose that has brought comfort in the hour of need, as if it were a direct message from heaven. Your poem embodies the truest Christian philosophy. "Be not anxious for tomorrow," said the Master; and one of His followers: "Take sorrow and trial, as it were, one stick at a time. We always have strength given to bear today's stick. God no longer promises grace for to-morrow."

More Uncooked Candy

Here is a recipe for French uncooked cream candies. I hope it is in time to be of use to the one who asked for it. To our own, beaten stiff, as far as frosting, add enough confectioner's sugar to make a stiff dough, and knead as you go on. It will require a good deal of kneading, and it is best to work in flouring and coloring as you go on. If the batter is too dry, add a little more. When dry, they may be slipped into chocolate. A perfectly new and clean butter is a good thing to use in dipping the balls.

The recipe for chili con carne which I saw a little while ago was unlike that I have seen in many ways, and I know it how the dish was prepared. I send the recipe, which you may use, or not, as you like.

Chili Con Carne

Cut raw or cooked meat into cubes and fry in lard or butter. When browned, remove the meat, brown some flour as for gravy, work into a thick batter with water, add a teaspoonful of chili powder to the and a little salt. Put the meat back in the pan with this gravy and simmer for an hour or more, stirring frequently. It must consist entirely of eggs and flour. It is served with maple syrup.

I enjoy the Exchange, and am always away most of it.

Mrs. M. S. V. (Los Angeles, Cal.)

And a very good use it is to make of it. It will be a handy book beyond price some day.

Your recipe for the much-talked-of Mexican dish is far simpler than any other having that name which has appeared in our Corner. Yet you are a prime authority on the subject, from your long residence in the land of chili con carne—which means "chilies with meat."

You will get your German panache. Some of our most active members are German housewives.

One brief word as to your attitude toward the Business Guest. Never let him feel himself to be an interloper. You may think to yourself that he might have gone to a hotel instead of demanding your plans for the day by accepting the invitation John could not help extending to him. While he is within your doors, it is your sacred duty to treat him as if he were there by your special and cordial wish. You owe it to yourself, to your husband and to the holy name of Hospitality.

Says He Will Not Tell Some Things Even if Beaten With a Club

NEW YORK, March 26.—(AP and P.) Fitch, secretary of the State Insurance Company of Iowa, for whom a $10,000 reward was offered for his capture, was reported to have been seen in Chicago, Ill., on March 25.

He was shown a clipping from a New York newspaper of recent date in which a New York correspondent gave a lengthy interview with Fitch, as he claimed to be in Chicago, Ill., on March 25.

After looking at the clipping, Fitch said it was not his. He said he had never been in Chicago, Ill., on March 25.

Now will you tell why you didn't communicate with your relatives?

LABOR CHARGES VIOLATIONS OF CHARTER

Alleges San Francisco Sewer Contractors Pay Less Than $2 a Day Wage

TAYLOR ADMINISTRATION IS CONDEMNED BY COOKS

Vameda Carpenters Denounce Discharge of White Workmen in Favor of Japs

SAN FRANCISCO, March 20.—Daniel O'Connell, an attorney, today called the attention of Secretary Gallagher of the Labor Council to the alleged violation of the charter in the payment of wages to laborers by the contractors who are building the Potrero intercepting sewer for the municipality. The Bureau Construction Company, which was awarded this contract at a cost of $98,000, he says, is paying its laborers but $1.75 a day, when the charter provides that men employed on public work shall be paid not less than $2 per day. The men employed by the construction company, so it is charged, are compelled to supply their own rubber boots and leggings. The men are obliged to work up to their thighs in water. In his communication O'Connell quotes the charter. He also says he is informed that the contractors raising the City Hall are paying their men less than the $2 minimum wage. He offers any assistance that the council may require in remedying these alleged violations of the law. The matter will be submitted to the next meeting of the council.

Home Industry Carnival

The council endorsed the project of the California Metal Trades Association to hold a home industry carnival, at which the products of this city will be displayed. Senator Richard J. Welch, in a letter to the council, explained his vote on the bill to increase the number of Superior Court judges in San Francisco and also the stand of a majority of the San Francisco delegation on that measure and also the initiative.

Upshotters' Union No. 38 asked for assistance in defending the Crescent Feather Company, an alleged unfair concern, from securing a contract for mattresses from the United States Department of Indian Affairs. The request was referred to the executive committee.

A communication was read from the Socialist party suggesting that William D. Haywood, secretary-treasurer of the Western Federation of Miners, be allowed to address the council. An invitation will be extended Mr. Haywood to speak next Friday evening.

The Janitors' Union asked for assistance in having the Victory Theater employ a union janitor. The request was referred to the executive committee.

Strikers Ask for Help

An appeal from the Chester, Pa., Street Carriers' Union, on strike, for financial assistance, was referred to the executive committee.

To the same committee was sent a request from the Gas Appliance and Stove Fitters' Union for a boycott against the San Francisco Gas and Electrical Appliance Company because of its refusal to employ union men.

A communication from the Central Labor Union of Washington, D. C., for information as to the best methods to further labor action, was referred to the label committee.

George R. French of the Cigarmakers' International Union, addressed the body on behalf of the cigarmakers' label. He also reviewed the decision of Justice Wright against Samuel Gompers and other leaders. He urged the delegates to remember to smoke only union cigars.

Delegate W. E. Terry of Journeymen Tailors' Union No. 1 reported that he was endeavoring to have the local dual organization to affiliate with the International Union, but so far had not met with much success, members of the so-called independent union refusing to join the regular organization.

Taylor Regime Denounced

Charles A. Taylor, secretary of the action of the Labor Council, condemning Mayor Taylor for his administration for alleged misconduct and extravagance and suggesting that a movement should be instituted to recall these alleged faithless public officials. A committee of three, including Taylor as chairman, was appointed to draft a charter for help.

Speaks on Trade Unionism

William D. Haywood, secretary-treasurer of the Western Federation of Miners, tonight addressed the meeting of the San Francisco Trades Union Auditorium. He discussed the question of the difference between the employer and employee. He analyzed the decision of Justice Wright and condemned the unionism methods in dealing with labor controversies. He also reviewed the struggle of the miners and other States and dwelt upon the tribulations and trials of the miner in his fight for a livelihood.

Two Cougars Follow Mountain Teacher

Schoolma'am is Object of Unwelcome Attention From Big Cats

SEATTLE, March 20.—Several weeks ago a cougar, measuring over eight feet in length, followed Miss Mary Bair, a teacher of the school at Stevens, in the edge of the Puget Sound country, residence, from near the schoolhouse until she met with a forestry ranger who, with others, subsequently ran down and killed the animal. Saturday Miss Bair went to visit a neighbor, and suddenly became aware that another cougar was following her. She later saw the animal ahead of her, but later saw it in the path ahead. She hurried ahead to her destination, and a hunting party composed of J. V. Cook and A. Pentin, with several dogs, stalked in pursuit.

Carpenters Complain

The District Council of Carpenters of Alameda county has adopted resolutions condemning the discharge of two of its members and the substituting by the owner of a building with Japanese carpenters. Their action, it is charged, was taken because they observed the Japanese American organization was intended to direct the attention of every building contractor in the State and also the United Brotherhood of Carpenters to the grievance. Their co-operation in this property owner and also against

DAINTY CLOTHES FOR TOTS THAT PLEASE THE MOTHERS

Department at Hales' Devoted to Mothers

One of the most up-to-date juvenile departments in Oakland—on the coast, says some—has been opened at Hales Bros., big department store, Eleventh and Washington streets. New and interesting showcases just back of the counter displaying numberless dainty novelties for the little tots, is only one among a number of new features. Ideas which have been installed in the local store. Everything from booties and long white slips for the tiny infant-in-arms up to fascinating little flower and bird-decked bonnets for the little maid from three to six years old are shown in confusing styles and numbers.

Revolver in Parcel Goes Off; Man Shot

SANTA ROSA, March 20.—While walking along Fifth street this afternoon John Lambert accidentally shot himself, inflicting a dangerous wound. He was carrying some parcels, one of which contained a revolver. In some manner the weapon went off and the ball passed through his body. He was hurried to the hospital in an ambulance and suffered much loss of blood before being placed on the operating table.

The Rich Beggar

In manhood's morn, he cast aside The humble raiment that was his, And sought to find supreme bliss In that which satisfied his pride.

Years brought him all for which he strove.

A fortune vast, an honored name, And with the wealth, came dainty fame, But nevertheless to him, came Love!

And now at last, he longs to see, His village haunts of years ago, And bet his careless heart had won, And if he find, again, might be.

If life were his to live once more, In all he thickly studied mark, That which he burned, the loving heart, He deemed the best life had to give.

Behold him at his village gate, A poor rich man who seeks Love's door, Remorseful for the years before.

Trembling for fear he comes too late! WILHELMINE D. TULLMAN 1832 Adeline st., Oakland, Cal.

LOST CITY WASN'T REALLY MISLAID

Sacred Village Turns Out to Be Uncompleted Castle Started by Britisher

SAN BERNARDINO, March 20.—Howard Long of San Jacinto has arrived here and knocks the romance out of the story sent out from Long Beach of the finding of the lost Sacred City among the San Jacinto mountains. The find was reported by a man named Bond.

Long states that about twenty-five years ago a notorious Englishman appeared in that region and commenced to lay out a splendid settlement in the mountains. He planned castles built on lines of those famous in the old world. The foundations of several of these castles were laid and winding roadways sketched out, when the Englishman disappeared. Long says that the ruins of the Sacred City are really the foundations of these castles.

GOVERNMENT TO PLANT MILLIONS OF TREES

Reforestation Being Carried On on an Extensive Scale by United States

The trees used in the national experiments in reforestation are grown at eight government nurseries in the western United States.

These eight stations now contain over 9,000,000 trees from one to three years old.

The preliminary stage of forest planting within the national forests is now past, says Woods Magazine, and several of the planting stations have produced trees of sufficient size to plant directly on the permanent site. About 700,000 trees were planted during the winter and spring of 1934.

At the nursery in the Grand River national forest more stock has reached an age suitable for planting than at the other stations. This nursery contains approximately 7,000,000 trees.

At present there are about 7,000,000 trees for planting in the sand hills. The species largely in use up to this time are Western yellow pine and Jack pine. Other species include Scotch pine, Norway pine and a variety of fir are being tested.

PLAN RECEPTION TO COMING PRELATE

Knights of Columbus to Give the Rt. Rev. Bishop O'Connell Welcome

News Gathered From Roman Catholic Churches Across the Bay

SAN FRANCISCO, March 20.—The Knights of Columbus are expected to arrive in the city in a few days and their reception will be one of the most important of the year. Bishop O'Connell is a warm admirer of the order, and he has invited the members of the Knights of Columbus to attend the dedication of the new church which is located on the corner of the city.

New St. Ignace Church will be dedicated next Sunday morning at 10 o'clock. The pastor of this church, Rev. M. J. Sullivan, has been working hard to get the church ready for the coming of the prelate. Since the church is a new one, it is more than doubtful whether the members of the order will be able to attend the dedication. The church is located on the corner of the city.

Enrollment of Members

Members of the Confraternity of St. Ann will receive a holy communion Sunday morning at 7:30 o'clock. A special indulgence will be given to those who receive communion in the afternoon at 2:30 o'clock. There will be a general meeting of the confraternity at 8 o'clock. The meeting will be held in the church.

NO ROOM FOR VEHICLES IN CHINESE CITIES

There are but two ways to go on the Chinese city—on foot or in a sedan chair. The streets are from four to eight feet wide, the average being probably about six feet, and wheeled vehicles are out of the question. Even the rickshaws cannot be used here. If you try to make way on foot the density of the moving masses renders progress almost impossible. The streets are almost impassable, so that the best plan is to take a responsible native guide and chair.

These chairs are carried by two, three and sometimes four men, according to the weight of the passenger. The two bamboo poles by which the chair is supported are about eighteen feet long and are held by the carriers at the ends. They are carried on poles carried across the shoulders.

It is surprising to see how rapidly they can go through the crowded streets, the whole line of their carriers are yelling all the time as at the other people who are carrying burdens, for as there are no cars to use the entire merchandise of the city is transported in the same manner, not in chairs, of course, but on poles carried across the shoulders.

CANNOT FULFILL DYING REQUEST

Bishop's Wish That Dr. Van Dusen Be Pallbearer Frustrated by Illness

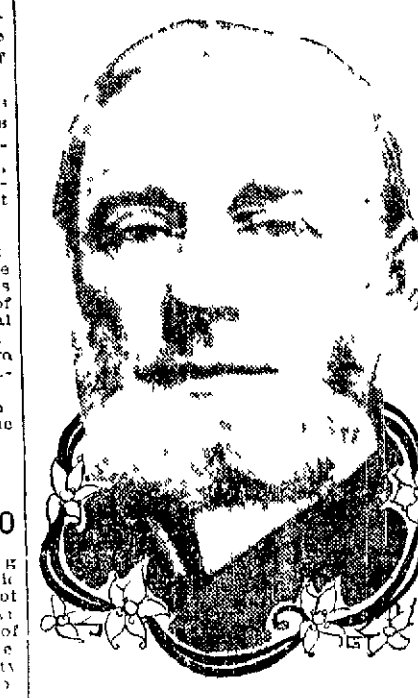

KALAMAZOO, Mich., March 20.—A touching incident in connection with the death in Grand Rapids yesterday of Bishop George P. Gillespie of the Episcopal Diocese of Western Michigan, is found in the fact that one of the bishop's oldest friends, Dr. J. J. Van Dusen, formerly of this city, but now of Grand Rapids, cannot act as one of the pallbearers in compliance with the bishop's last expressed wishes.

Dr. Van Dusen is himself being critically ill at his home in New York State. An old friend of Bishop Gillespie, he was in his last hours in the city of Grand Rapids, where he was a member of the Episcopal Church. He was a member of the Michigan State Board of Corrections and Charities.

Dr. Van Dusen was the first superintendent of the Michigan Asylum for the Insane in this city.

PLANT FOUR TREES ON SCHOOL GROUNDS

SAN FRANCISCO, March 20.—Arbor Day was celebrated today with exercises at the Glen Park Grammar School, preceding the planting of trees about the schoolhouse. The San Francisco Woman's Club, with Mrs. Theodore Plathier president, arranged an attractive program, which was enjoyed by the children and parents of the district. The exercises began with an address by the president of the Glen Park Improvement Association. He paid a tribute to Mrs. Lovell White for her work in the preservation of the Chaucer's Grove and said the school at large owed her a vote of thanks.

Addresses were made by Thomas E. Hayden of the Board of Education, Supervisor George A. Cronin, Joseph A. and Rev. Father Cullen.

The first tree was planted at the corner of the school building where it is located. To President Taft. The second was planted by the school children.

Dr. Smith, who has been forming plans for an expedition to Somaliland in 1899-1900. In 1899, he crossed through the country to the Nile, making extensive explorations. He has crossed the United States on horseback, and is noted for his energy and daring.

SCHOOL BANKING SYSTEM PLANNED

Superintendent Frick Would Teach Principles of Thrift by Practical Methods

A banking system whereby public school children will be taught the principles of thrift may soon be introduced in the Oakland public schools. T. D. Martin, principal of the Longfellow School, submitted a preliminary report as to the feasibility of this school saving bank plan. The report of Mr. Martin, which was very comprehensive and illuminating, was adopted by the principals in session, and a resolution was passed recommending that the city Board of Education sanction the scheme.

The system as explained by County Superintendent Frick provides for a treasurer in each classroom. Children are to turn over any money they wish to save, and the treasurer will place it in bulk form in the bank.

Start Individual Accounts

Whenever a student has as much as $1 to his or her credit in individual account will be placed in the bank in the student's name. This system is new to the school, but has been successfully operated in several of the eastern cities of about the population of Oakland.

Next Thursday evening a principal's meeting will be held in the rooms of the Board of Education for the purpose of discussing the banking system. A committee composed of J. D. Martin, chairman; Mr. Crawford and Mr. Chandler recommended the system to the principals. The Board of Education has not as yet passed upon the banking system, but it is believed that the proposition is a good one.

Form Athletic League

Another matter which has been brought to the attention of the principals is that of organized (track) school athletics. Steps have been taken in this regard, and already the pupils are working enthusiastically for the formation of the athletic league.

WAS A NOVICE AT MATRIMONY GAME

Young Italian Did Not Understand the Preacher's End of "Getting Married"

Bob Bailek, a young and prosperous Italian resident of Oakland, walked up to the "municipal desk" in the county clerk's office yesterday with his pretty Austrian sweetheart, Annetta Meselli, also of Oakland, trailing behind, and with a display of considerable agitation asked Deputy Browning for a marriage license.

"That obliging gentleman made out the necessary papers in a jiffy and handed the prospective groom back $3 as change for the shining $5.00 piece he had offered to pay for the license.

"But that $3 is for the marriage," said Bailek as he insistently pushed the change back to Browning.

"That paper doesn't marry you," explained the clerk. "It simply gives you the right to marry under the law. You will have to hunt up some preacher or court and have the ceremony performed."

Bailek and his sweetheart looked at each other in unfeigned astonishment. "Why, I thought this was all we had to do to get married," said the girl.

"No, indeed," replied Browning. "You must now go and get married."

"Oh," ejaculated Bailek as he grabbed up the $3, "then I'll just keep this money to pay for the ceremony."

And thus did victims of a fat lip vanish from the limousine cars that decorate the genial face of the accommodating marriage license deputy.

BAD CHECK CASES CROWD COURTS

Police Judge Smith Thinks That There Should Be Change in Banking System

There is a startling amount of fictitious, forged and worthless checks turned over to Captains of Detectives Walter J. Peterson, Daily merchants and banks report the loss of sums of various amounts which aggregate hundreds of dollars every month on account of worthless checks. The State's prisons are crowded with men who have either signed their own names or have forged someone's else name on worthless checks. The police courts and the Superior court calendars are congested with check cases.

Affairs have come to a strange predicament. Police authorities and other officials, who through their positions have become cognizant with these too numerous cases, have recently declared in favor of the abolition of the check system.

Easy Way to Riches

The authorities believe that the abolition of the system would be beneficial to all. No longer would the young man be tempted to put himself through temporary financial troubles by that easy method of merely cashing checks which he knows to be of no value. No longer would the banks and merchants be worried because of these defalcations.

Perhaps there is no one person so familiar with these matters as Judge Mortimer Smith of the Police Court. Perhaps there is not another man who has given his attention to the subject as has the Judge. There is no other man who has more feeling for the weak young fellow who has not accurate realization of criminal deeds of seemingly slight importance.

Might Change System

"It is a very difficult question to discuss," said Judge Smith yesterday. "I think that I would be in favor of abolishing the check system. I think the system need not be totally abolished, but certainly there is ample room to change the methods to decrease the now increasing tendency to forge checks."

Law Is Harsh Teacher

"I must say that I am sorry for any young fellow who is so inexperienced in the world as to gain funds on a worthless check. What is the use in sending a fellow to jail for his lack of knowledge. What is the use of sending a young man's prospects by suddenly swooping down upon his tender knowledge and teaching him in anything but elastic methods the error of his ways."

"Why not amend the present customs so that the temptation will not strike him with such vivid force. You mark my words, there will be a time, and that period is not far away, that everyone will realize the difficulty and possibilities of this system and a wave tending towards a compromise of the system adopted in a rush. You know that the banks hold up a motto, 'No compromise with criminals.' So you can see just what I mean."

Race Exhausts Others

Kindred finished his story by telling the twelve blond men that he and the third man had been in the same room at 11 a.m. "I tried to do more than I was able of it but blew up when he passed the third table post and I really fell out of contention there," Crowe appeared to be making a bid when the third started to tell that Crowe's account was too much for this young little man and he finished for him in the Buoyville side of the race for the first mile but began to slip when the runner was half over and appeared to be in a state of complete exhaustion. "I was ready to drop," he said, "but I finished the end of the race that it is the last time this kind of thing but will be asked to go such a route."

Great Crowd Present

The Thronton St. is one of the best events of the local in the season, conviving with it an added purse of $5,000.

Despite the threatning weather and the chill wind which blew over the course, there was a tremendous crowd at the park and the betting ring was thronged throughout the afternoon. Several new books out in for the first event, all of them handling an exceptionally heavy play.

The first four were out in force and there was a good crowd of spring millinery and towns on the clothe line and piazzas and in the grandstand. Several the media of the afternoon a dinner, the first in a deal of distinction among the first winners of the fluvy.

At the Clubhouse

Among the prominent society folk seen at the course was

CONTEST POSITIVELY CLOSES APRIL 15

Important Changes Made in the Leadership Today

To ally any fears or hopes to the contrary on the part of contestants, it is positively stated that the contest will close April 15th.

Leadership Changes
Today's list proves what has often been said before, that no one is really secure at the head of his list until the contest is over. New candidates are entering and forcing to the front, proving that the proverbial black horse is still extant.

New Union Man
An interesting surprise is shown in the union men's division by J. F. Kingston taking the lead. Mr. Kingston has been in the contest only a few days, and with fresh enthusiasm he now goes to the head of his class.

Shannon Goes to Top
With the police there is evidently a big contest on foot, for at least three of them are out with full force for the grand prize. Today M. J. Shannon goes from a third place to the first of his list. There is no more popular officer in the contest than Mr. Shannon, and a host of friends say they are going to see that he gets the automobile. Such concentrated effort is bound to produce good results.

Among Railroad Men
There is a distinct change to be seen in one division of the contest. Guy Purdy of Richmond has received 20,000 votes since the last list appeared. Mr. Purdy's chances of success are bright.

Mrs. May to Front
But the gains are not all among the men. An Alameda woman, Mrs. M. A. May, who entered the contest only a short time ago, now goes to the lead by a goodly margin and so. So many well-known women are working for the prize that it is hard to tell whose votes are best, but if the contest were ending tomorrow Mrs. May would receive it.

Present List no Indication
The present list is no indication of what the votes will be at the end, nor in reality a much indication of the present positions of candidates, as each knows what forces he or she can muster and is planning the campaign accordingly. It is steady, organized work from now on which will determine the winners.

Classified Ads Help
An unusually liberal feature of the contest is the fact that votes are being secured with classified advertising. Five votes will be given for each five cents worth up to $1 and from then on an ascending scale as follows:

100 votes for.....$1.00
150 votes for.....1.50
200 votes for.....2.00
250 votes for.....2.50
300 votes for.....3.00
400 votes for.....4.00
500 votes for.....5.00
600 votes for.....6.00
700 votes for.....7.00
800 votes for.....8.00
900 votes for.....9.00
1,000 votes for.....10.00
All fractional parts over $1 between amounts designated are figured at the rate of 5 cents for each cent.

THESE are the classified advertisements containing $5.00 worth of classified advertising coupons, which are for sale at the office for $2.50. Each book contains the purchase of 200 votes in the contest, besides giving him $3.00 worth of advertising for $2.50. A receipt book with which to secure subscriptions upon application to THE TRIBUNE. Votes will be allowed on subscriptions secured anywhere in the United States or Mexico.

NEW YORK, March 20.—George Bonahof of the Irish-American Athletic Club and the champion distance runner of America, tonight again proved himself to be the most sensational amateur distance runner of the last decade when he smashed to smithereens the seven-mile record of the Irish-American Athletic Club, held at the Twenty-second Regiment Armory. Not only did Bonahof shatter the old seven-mile record of 26 minutes and 40 seconds, made by Eddie Carter in 1886, but he also broke the 3.5-mile record, held by three men, of 5:17, 5:17, 5:17.

Bonahof ran against a play composed of two of the best distance runners in the country, Jimmy Lee and Fred Bellows. The former ran the first four miles while Bellows ran the final three. Bonahof's time was 35 minutes 59.2 seconds, a record of 100 yards in 1:10.4 when Bonahof took up the running, but the New York Athletic Club runner gradually cut this down until he passed the 100 yards of the time, when he stopped completely and generously gave Bonahof the victory.

NEW YORK, March 20.—The car which went on a pack-trail to the coast and returned to the city yesterday afternoon for the M. Robert Cunningham trophy from this city to the Alaska-Takona-Pacific Exposition on June 1st, started for Seattle from the city hall this noon.

Franklin's Down Sweats
The Young Franklin's defeated the Sweet's school baseball team yesterday in a fast and exciting game by the score of 3 to 1. The feature of the game was the fielding of the Franklins and the pitching of Wilkerson. He allowed no hits.

Another game will be played between the same teams next Monday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock on the Lake Merritt grounds.

The Franklins would like to hear from any nine wishing to play with them and keep the sport alive in the city. The line-up is as follows: Carl Wilkerson, pitcher; Jack Winston, catcher; W. Webb, first base; Joe Supple, second base; Lynn Hill, third base; D. Musker, shortstop; George Meader, center field; Joe Keller, left field; Watson Marvin, right field. Address challenges to Leo Markelwitz, 160 Second Avenue.

widespread notice. On this same day the Nevada handicap at one mile and the Kentucky handicap at one mile and one-half furlongs will go to make up an attractive card. Other features for the week will be the Devon handicap at six furlongs on Tuesday and the Bowle handicap at one and one-half miles on Wednesday, which will assure a good week's sport.

Where to Go
Much speculation is going the rounds what will be doing the coming season in the way of racing. While the writer has had no official notice that the tracks will be closed, he has heard that the tracks will be closed for the season of 1909. It is still some time before the close of our present season and the opening of summer racing, yet rumors are anxious to know what the prospects will be. Doctor will not doubt have fifty days while Colorado Springs and minor points will fill in the balance of the summer. The track record at the latter place is the most agreeable place to spend a summer. The city is prosperous and the track is well kept. It is a good place for the horse who loves to speculate and enjoy the keen pleasure of outdoor sport. Every indication is that Doctor will not only take its place in the front rank of American racing.

Cobb Breaks Up Game
SAN ANTONIO, Texas, March 20.—Washington was defeated by Detroit here today in a desperately played game (lasting eleven innings) by a 3 to 2 score. Cobb broke up the game by hitting over the fence for a home run. Cobb's single brought Bush home, tying things up in the fourth inning. In the sixth Washington forged ahead, and in the seventh inning young Laubs double, Moriarty tripled in the seventh and scored on an infield out. Works cut loose a hot shot in the eighth inning, but Moriarty was thrown out at the plate by McIntyre and Bush. After a long hit to left in the eleventh, in Detroit's half, a muff by Bush and a throw by Moriarty secured only 6 points.

POLICE RESPECT WON BY CHINESE

"I Have Met But One Drunken Chinaman," Says Captain Lynch

But a chosen few have knowledge of the Oakland Chinatown. Few even are aware that Chinatown is prosperous. Few believe that Chinatown has withstood the recent financial stringency with great more solidly than "other" cities.

Less than a few know of the population, or of the customs, or of the extent of business, or of the inhabitants of our own Chinatown. It is scarcely ten years in Oakland and know of the characteristics of the characteristics, of the wonderful proportion and of the still more wonderful gentleness to be found in residents of the Celestial quarters of this city.

Know the Chinese
Captain of Police Lynch knows the Chinese. Captain Peterson knows the Chinese. Both of these men have made more or less of a study of these strange people who thrive in this country under the peculiar conditions.

Captain Lynch said yesterday that he really held an admiration for the Chinese. He compared them with the Japanese as residents of the country. The comparison was greatly in favor of the Chinese.

Wonderful People
"It is wonderful how the Chinese are able to get along the way they do," said Captain Lynch. "Little or no poverty is to be found among the residents. No drunkenness runs its degrading course among them. No extravagant habits keep them from the pursuit of happiness. And yet we are compelled to ask ourselves the question regarding how they gain sufficient money to sustain them. They do little work. They seem to have enough money and spend it between themselves keeping it among the families, as it were."

"In all my experience I have come in contact with but one drunken Chinaman. They never make a parade of it. They feel a little dizzy and they beat it for their troubles. There are two or three classes of Chinese to be found here. First of all, there is the Chinaman who came from China. He clings to his old habits and while he becomes accustomed to a degree, yet he never sheds the yoke of the fatherland. He does not sanction the American methods in any way. He does not want to adopt the customs in dress or of personal appearance. All he wants is personal liberty. He harbors an animosity against American Chinese.

Bad Native Sons
"We frequently have calls from Chinese over the telephone. In their peculiar Chinese-American language they inform us that young native son Chinese have suddenly flocked down upon Chinatown and they feel them. The native son Chinaman is regarded as very bad. According to the older Chinese they are responsible for all the trouble, wars, hold-ups and other crime committed in Chinatown."

"But, take it all in all the Chinese have proven themselves far superior to the Japanese. They are a wonderful people, who will make good citizens. They respect the government, know their places, believe in righteousness and are free from intemperance habits. Few Chinese use opium, although general belief is that they are habitual opium users."

INDORSE MRS. CARLISLE FOR SCHOOL DIRECTOR

The Mothers Club of the Perilla school held one of its very interesting meetings Friday afternoon at Perilla school on Alameda avenue. The club is rapidly growing in numbers and is taking an active interest in the many proposed improvements for the benefit of the school children. The club unanimously indorsed Mrs. Elmer Carlisle for the office of school director. Mr. McClymonds, superintendent of schools, delivered an interesting talk to the club members on the government and education of children and the good results accomplished through their organization. The Mothers Club of the Perilla school should be advised to the secretary, Mrs. C. F. Hodgman, 1330 School street, Oakland, Cal.

PROGRESS OF YEOMEN'S BROTHERHOOD IS RAPID

The Brotherhood of American Yeomen held its regular weekly meeting Friday at Elythian Hall, Twelfth and Alameda streets. The degree team, under the leadership of Miss Jessie Christy and Miss Violet Stout, exemplified its work in a pleasing and efficient manner.

It is safe to predict a very successful future for this homebased and in fact, the whole brotherhood, judging from the enthusiasm existing among all members and the practical business proposition offered to all eligible persons desiring fraternal insurance.

Next Friday night the Yeomen will give a social dance.

AGREE TO DEMANDS OF UNION TEAMSTERS

The Lyon Storage Company yesterday agreed to the demands of the Brotherhood of Teamsters by restoring union men as drivers of their wagons at a salary of $3.50 per day of 12 hours. Fifty cents is the rate agreed upon for every hour overtime.

AMERICAN BANKERS TO MEET IN MAY

NEW YORK, March 20.—The spring meeting of the executive council of the American Bankers Association will be held at the Briarcliffe Lodge, Briarcliffe Manor, New York, the first week in May.

Wills Should Be Published Before Eulogies, Says Samuel Shortridge

THE KNAVE

Mayor Taylor Wants Foreign Wine in Preference to Home Production

SAN FRANCISCO, March 20.—"The wills should be published in advance of the eulogies." So said Samuel M. Shortridge, and his dictum will be echoed by many a man who had gone off at half-cock in words of laudation that showed his early pieties and abnegations had not been rewarded by the great gift of prophecy.

Shortridge had unleashed his eloquent tongue over the memory of Reuben H. Lloyd, president of the Board of Park Commissioners. The orator had taken it for granted that the dead millionaire, having no dependent relation except an aged sister, would enrich Golden Gate Park with some princely remembrance in his will. So he went on to paint a picture of future generations gathering around some noble pile or glowing pleasure and revering the generous name of Lloyd. His words flowed, his eye gleamed, his chest swelled as he painted the word picture. The listening people wiped their tear-dimmed eyes and went away saying what a noble man was Lloyd to give so generously for the public good.

And then, when the will was opened, there wasn't a word or a cent for the park. In death as in life the great Knight Templar held on to his hoardings with a careful hand, and even his mild donations to the Masons had a string tied to them in the way of a possible contest on a legal technicality. And so it is that the word-painting Shortridge makes his declaration that hereafter all wills should be published before the panegyrists are called upon to beautify a thought and adorn the landscape with cloud-capped towers and gorgeous palaces of benevolence and public spirit. Poor Golden Gate Park hasn't had a fat donation for many a day, and Lloyd was a bitter disappointment.

What do you think of our patriotic Mayor asking for foreign champagne at the coming Portola banquet? Wouldn't that give you a fizz headache?

Here we are going to have a fiesta that is distinctly Californian. It is called for the discoverer of San Francisco bay—the man of variegated spelling and much mispronunciation. Surely he was Californian. The festival is for the purpose of booming San Francisco and boosting California industries, and yet, at the very kick-off, the Mayor and his following have insisted on foreign wines at the big banquet—and California a proud wine State, competing with France and Germany and Spain in producing the different vintages. No wonder there is a howl and a kick among the California wine men; but the French champagne agents, who have expense money to burn, are proportionately elated. So the Mayor has engineered a splendid victory of France over California.

The excuse is made that the foreign consular representatives are to be at that banquet and that their palates should not be saluted by the plebeian California wine. But you'd think that these foreign consuls were just the men to advertise our wines with. Those wines are good enough for anybody. They are far better than some of the imported "brick vineyard" stuff that will be served. So the California wine men have a good kick coming, and it is no wonder they are sour on the Mayor and are criticizing the management of the forthcoming festivity.

The story goes the round of the clubs that our old friend John McNaught's lines have fallen in pleasant places. He is Joseph Pulitzer's confidential man, and is over in Paris studying art and manners and languages, while his Alaskan mine pours down a Pastorian flood of profits.

The finding of that mine was one of the romances of the land of "The Great White Silence." McNaught was pegging along in San Francisco journalism without any future at all commensurate with his charming talents, when one day his cultured and delightful wife said at the table:

"John, I'm going to Nome!"

"But, my dear, I can't get away just now," he expostulated.

"You're not to get away. I'm going up there to get a mine."

The thing didn't seem possible. Here was a woman who was the very type of home life and social culture, proposing to jostle elbows with the hard-scarum men and women of a mining "rush." A lady of delicacy and refinement was going into a new mining camp to take her chances among people like those driven out of town with John Oakhurst, the gambler.

But she carried her point, joined the "rush" and sought the new Nome placers. Then came out the true Western manhood. Mrs. McNaught's delicacy and breeding were recognized at once. She received no treatment that a queen might not have expected. Everything was deference and chivalry. She went out and located her claim. She worked that claim with diligence and good hard sense. And she won. The claim became a mine—not one of the fabulous "finds" of those Alaskan wastes, but a mine of sufficient richness to put the McNaughts on Easy street for all time to come. And hosts of men and women in San Francisco are mighty glad to hear of the good fortune, for none were more deservedly popular.

During the week the Pacific Union Club, by a vote of 412 to 51, completely snowed under the grouchers and snivlers who feared to go ahead with the fine club house that is to be made of the old Flood mansion, with its rained brown stone splendors, on Nob hill. Willis Polk, the architect, said it would take six months to complete the plans and get the contracts under way, and a year more to complete the building.

On the club's down-town lot, at Stockton and Post streets, a five-story Class C building is to be erected. This has been leased for five years to a single tenant at a rental beginning at $2500 a month and growing from that figure. This will very nearly carry the interest on the entire bonded indebtedness of the club, which is showing many signs of life lately and is getting out of the old designation of "the wax figures."

Among the recent events in the Pacific Union is the organization of "The Goslings"—a limited coterie of members who meet on occasion to dine, tell stories and sing songs—yes, even to sing songs. Some have suggested that "The Guzlings" would be a more appropriate title, but that is neither here nor there. The coterie was organized by Charles Foster Shreve's, who has had a large experience in such matters at the Bohemian Club, where he was one of the founders of "The Cheerful Workers," the "Knights of the Round Table" and "The Outlaws"—coterie that were famous at a time when there was far more Bohemianism among the children of the owl than at present.

Another matter that has stirred the Pacific Union is the piling of the Baron von Schroeder. This shows that the richest club in the West does not worship title and European rank as much as the polloi suppose. Though the baron was not actually blackballed, it was necessary for his sponsors to withdraw his name to keep him from being subjected to that humiliation. It is told by the gossips that the cause of the baron's woe was the old San Rafael scandal which came to the surface at the time of his suit for libel. It was held against him that he had not protected the names of the women of his flirtations in the way deemed necessary among the men of the West. But he had many friends and defenders in the club, and the strife over his name waxed warm—and hasn't even yet entirely cooled.

The Bohemian Club has entirely financed its building scheme and is getting ready to build on its lot at Taylor and Post streets. It is a big lot, and the new club house will be one of the most commodious in the country.

Just west of the Bohemian lot is the great hole of the Olympic Club. But that large and prosperous organization is rapidly perfecting its plans for "getting out of the hole." Its architectural competition is to come off in May, and President Humphrey can see his way clear to push the building project right through when once the plans have been decided upon.

The steel for the splendid Elks' Club, on Powell street, north of Sutter, is now in place and the walls will soon begin to show what the club building is to look like. Just across the street "The Family" is putting in the foundations for its new home, which is to be one of the most attractive buildings in all the city. Up at the corner of California and Powell streets the fine University Club building nears exterior completion. The Argonaut Club's home at Post and Powell streets has passed the excavation stage, and the swagger Woman's Club is in the brick work stage at Stockton street and Union Square avenue. But it was the Union League Club that got down town first, and its rooms have been very much discussed and admired. They are upstairs at the corner of O'Farrell and Powell streets. This big club ought to own its home, and undoubtedly will do so when its present lease runs out. However, Powell street, instead of Post, is now to be "Club street," and the prosperity of these social organizations is a good index of the general prosperity of the entire city.

Apparently the public has not caught on to the shrewd intent behind Heney's threat to prosecute for perjury Peter Duchien, a retired manufacturer, summoned to serve as a juror in the Calhoun case.

Duchien is of the solid citizen class, nearly all of whom strongly sympathize with the railway magnate, and who are consequently regarded with suspicion and aversion by Heney.

Failing to shake Duchien's qualifications by a long series of questions couched in the tone of insult and the language of accusation, Heney called two of Burns' spies to swear that the juror had made disqualifying statements to them last July. Duchien contradicted the myrmidons of justice, whereat Heney published a manifesto in the Call threatening to prosecute Duchien and all other jurors who dared to contradict the agents of Mr. Burns.

He expressed a doubt whether he should prosecute by indictment or by information. From which it may be inferred that he is not so sure of the co-operation of this Grand Jury as he was of the one on which Fred Sanborn earned the seat he now occupies on the Police Commission. He probably has to do a little more feeling out before he is sure of his ground.

However, the threat of prosecuting Mr. Duchien has been generally taken as merely a piece of wanton brutality to an old man who had offended the great prosecutor by promptly getting off the jury when objected to.

But it is a good deal more than that. It is notice to the men already in the box that if they fail to render a verdict satisfactory to Mr. Heney they are likely to be prosecuted, on the testimony of Burns' spies, for perjury committed while they were being examined touching their qualifications to serve as jurymen.

If Duchien can be convicted, anybody can be convicted. Two Burns men or two persons procured by Burns' men, have merely to swear that at some time in some place the talesman made statements to them privately that he denied, while under examination, and up he goes. Easy as shooting fish!

A jurymen can be prosecuted on such a charge and such testimony after a verdict is rendered in the Calhoun case as easy as before the empanelment of the jury. Mr. Heney knows what he is about, and he has abundantly proved the ability of Mr. Burns to produce expert testimony whenever and wherever required. He knows there will be no hitch in the program as long as the oaths of Mr. Burns' acolytes are taken at their face value. Hence, I say the swat at poor old Duchien was intended as a general threat addressed to all present and prospective jurors that they must be good and not displease Mr. Heney.

The fierce attacks made by the Bulletin and Call on Duchien and Robert Graves, another juror who offended Mr. Heney, are cumulative proof that I am right when I say Mr. Heney did not play the vulgar bully with Mr. Duchien merely to gratify a blackguard inclination. He was actuated by a crafty motive having a very definite object in view.

A horrible rumor has crept out from Washington to the effect that the position of Lord High Commissioner from the White House to California has been abolished. This will be a sad blow to Benjamin Ide Wheeler, who has filled the position for the last seven years with such activity and astuteness that he came to be known in Washington as the Third Senator from California. At the White House he was always consulted—privately—in regard to Federal appointments and policies affecting the Pacific Coast. Moreover, he was a confidential emissary of Roosevelt in the politics of California, a sort of private smelling committee or secret service agent, to find out things to be whispered confidentially in the Presidential ear.

His services are to be dispensed with. His position is abolished. The peculiar function he fulfilled will not be required in future. The President will get his tips through the accustomed channels, and will not do politics on the private detective system.

Therefore the president of the State University will not be required to run to Washington three or four times a year to tell the President of the United States all about it. This will curtail President Wheeler's political activities and importance, but it will permit him to give more of his time and attention to the affairs of the university. Whether politics on the university will suffer by the change remains to be seen.

President Wheeler did not pose at the White House at the inauguration of Taft. He did not figure prominently at any time in the ceremonies. The newspapers forgot he was alive. The new President didn't know "no such person." The snow and the sleet came, but not Benjamin Ide Wheeler. His failure to appear on this occasion was in gloomy contrast to the large way he loomed up at Washington on March 4, 1905.

When a king is dead his favorites are seldom sought out for honor and distinction, and when the President gives way to a new man the members of his kitchen cabinet and secret diplomatic service are usually given the boot. Memory of the peculiar services they rendered their master adds energy to the kicks, and their office, shorn of its power and backing, becomes at once the scorn and contempt of men who pretended to respect it when it was potent.

President Wheeler did not even issue his regular bulletin of instructions to Congress when it assembled to tinker with the tariff. Formerly he was on hand at every meeting of Congress to tell it what to do and what the Pacific Coast expected of it. Standing on the White House steps, he would remark to the crowding correspondents that Congress must understand that the President was right and that the people were behind him.

But the master is gone and the man is kicked down the steps and ordered off the premises. The republics always were ungrateful.

The old saw that "politics makes strange bedfellows" is given confirmation in the new combination recently put in operation and which is endeavoring to capture the Republican county committee. This alliance includes little Danny Ryan, who once ran, or walked, for Mayor; Ralph Hathom, who has aspired to various judicial nominations and appointments; Gumshoe Burns, Alcott Greggains and Senator Dick Welch, who is the political mentor of little Danny. Greggains is devoting particular attention to the Tenderloin, where he has protected interests that furnish his support. Ryan and Hathom are endeavoring to hold together some fragments of the Lincoln-Roosevelt League, including its representatives in the county committee, and trying to capture sufficient others to make a majority of the local governing body. Gumshoe is endeavoring to build up a political machine for himself and his principals, while Senator Welch's attitude is accounted for by his well-known acrobatic tendencies to be in all camps and with all factions at all times that such a course may politically advantage Welch.

That this queer confederation has accomplished anything is not apparent, and it is doubtful if it will be able to even build up a job-trading influence.

The canvass of William Crocker, the former planing mill man, for the nomination for Mayor is regarded by his supporters as looking remarkably well. Marshal Hall and James Rolph Jr., both of whom have been credited with the consoling fires of ambition to be Mayor themselves, are now out for Crocker.

A small bunch of Lincoln-Roosevelt Leaguers are coddling Rolla M. Watt, the insurance man, for the nomination for Mayor.

Joseph J. Dunne, brother of that leader of the bar, Peter F. Dunne, is being urged by his associates to become a candidate for District Attorney. "Joe" Dunne, as he is familiarly called by his many friends, is a good lawyer and an able prosecutor. There is an undetermined question as to his eligibility under the five years' residence requirement, Dunne having spent a considerable period in Honolulu.

The Republicans have a large field from which to select a nominee for Sheriff. Among these are former County Clerk and present Chief Deputy Assessor Billy Blatter; former Auditor Harry Baehr; Fred Eggers, former Supervisor and political boss of the Thirty-sixth Assembly District; George Adams, ex-registrar of Voters; former Sheriff Charles S. Laumister; and State Senators Tom Finn and Dick Welch.

There has been some talk of Sheriff Larry Dolan getting into the race for County Clerk, and Harry Mulcrevy, the incumbent of the latter office, running for Mayor. This is apparently but an indication of how one Democratic wing would like to see the line-up for the present outlook, to-wit: Dolan will be nominated to succeed himself in the Sheriff's office, and that Mulcrevy will again run for County Clerk, although he is now complaining of ill health.

John W. Rogers, the real estate man, and who has been conspicuous politically as the manager of the campaigns of Congressman E. A. Hayes, is being talked up by his numerous friends for the Republican nomination for either Recorder or Supervisor. Rogers has not held a political position, except the office of curator of the museum in Golden Gate Park may be considered as such, he having had charge of that institution for two or three years.

Much surprise has been expressed by those unacquainted with the late Reuben H. Lloyd that of his large estate he left nothing to charity or public benefactions, particularly Golden Gate Park, of the commission governing which he was president. It had been thought by those interested in the park that Lloyd would leave to that great outing ground at least $100,000, as he had always expressed the greatest consideration for it and its development. He had been chosen president of the commission but a short time before his death, and because of his expressed desire to hold that honorary office prior to leaving this earth.

Those who knew Lloyd well were fully aware that his was not a generous soul. He was seldom moved to financial or other helpful contribution. He was extremely thrifty and evidently favored the axiom "take care of the nickels and the dollars will take care of themselves." It is related that on one occasion when Lloyd had handed the legless newsboy at the intersection of Kearny and Market streets a dime for a paper, the rich man waited patiently until the cripple crossed the street to Lotta's fountain, using his arms and hands for propulsion, and returned with the nickel change. Lloyd got the nickel.

For a long time Lloyd posed as the father or author of the Dutch windmill in Golden Gate Park. The man to whom this credit is due, and who has waited long for tardy recognition of his effort, is none other than Henry T. Scott. It was Scott who stated that by installing a windmill, in connection with an artesian well, sufficient water would be pumped into Stow lake to furnish a supply for irrigating and reclaiming a large portion of the sand dunes that were included in the park area. Lloyd strenuously opposed the project, and it was not until Adolph Spreckels became a member of the commission that sufficient votes were secured to carry it into effect. Prior to the installation of the windmill Spring Valley's bills for

ONLY DAUGHTER OF KAISER TO HAVE PALACE

Silent "Little Princess" Getting Busy for Life Befitting Station

TO GIVE UP DOLLS TO RULE EIGHT SERVANTS

Royal Maid's Dignity Is Source of Worry to English Companion

BERLIN, March 20.—The "Little Princess" as Berliners call Empress William's only daughter, is beginning to "come out." She will not be 13 until next September, but already preparations are being made for her independent life. Her confirmation has been postponed beyond the usual age, as the Empress wished that immediately after that solemn ceremony the "Little Princess" shall begin housekeeping on her own account.

Hitherto the Princess has been leading rather a retired life with her books, bef painting, her needlework, and, it must be added her dolls. In a few weeks she will blossom out as a full-blown Hehenzollern princess.

Appears at Dances

Lately in a sort of tentative shy fashion, she appeared at two or three court balls, but she was allowed to dance only twice as the Empress thinks it is not light for a young lady in her daughter's Princess Victoria Louise is a very unassuming, young and earnest person.

 Her views are one you know, unless it is her English companion. The probability is that her opinions are in a very imperfect state of development. Her views are more remarkable for extent or variety.

Cares Nothing for Dress

She cares nothing for dress and is utterly indifferent to what she wears.
 Her English companion seeks to instill into her right views on this important her English is perfect, better perhaps than her German. She shows considerable interest in kindergarten work in infants' homes and in the improving of the condition of poor mothers with multitudinous families of babies. But in matters music, the drama, painting and sculpture she is very backward.

the palace near Potsdam known as Rheinsberg a pretty little place belonging to the Emperor with a pleasant garden and looking over one of the charming lakes of the country. She will command a staff of eight indoor servants. A pony carriage and a small automobile will be at her disposal.

Princess Is Doyal

The Empress and the Princess have been very busy lately in getting matters into shape. They visit Rheinsberg daily, and every detail is minutely gone into, especially by the Empress, who is in her element in such work.

The Princess took in the decorating of her new home in all the simplest character. The rooms she is to inhabit will be made as light as possible, the furniture and hangings all to be in bright or light colors.

Skillful at Needle

Her bedroom will be to his sense distasteful. The German girl There is a plain brass bedstead and the other articles of furniture are all white. A handsome little white table a gift from her mother stands next to the dressing table and a writing table. The Princess is very skillful with her needle and some of her embroidery decorates the working rooms of her father and her mother.

The door to the painted a light-colored room. Her boudoir and reception room are walled with imitation marbles. For a mapie used the Princess shows a strong liking and is many rooms of the interior be painted in the same color and polished. The chairs and sofa in the boundaries are in pale pink silk the Princesses favorite color. In this she differs from her sister-in-law the Crown Princess whose delight is in pale blue, and from her mother who loves all shades of purple and blue.

Artificial Ice Rink

There will be a tennis court, an artificial ice rink and several other arrangements to permit the Princesses to cultivate sport. Hitherto she has not shown the faintest inclination for outdoor exercise.

The Princess has somewhat improved in looks lately, and promises to develop into a pleasant looking German girl, without intention to beatty but with kind, winning ways and absolutely devoid of vanity or self. In fact her lack of dignity is a source of worry to her English companion and more than once she has been shunned, taken to task for neglect of the dignity of her position. There is no prospect of her immediate marriage to her father nor her mother has begun to make any matrimonial arrangements for her.

tion Monsieur Boudoulet who is conducting the case was surprised at the advent of the Jewish woman.

"That Is the Woman"

She demanded to see the prisoner, and when brought before Josephine Sargent, said: "That is the woman to whom I gave the child I recognize her perfectly."

"To this Josephine replied: "That is very strange for I have never seen you before and never have been in Brussels."

The judge then opened a new investigation which proved that the woman from Brussels was either mistaken or simply an imposter and she could really be the daughter of the old woman of Versailles.

The public feeling which once ran high against the Sargents is subsiding owing to the splendid work of the police in such close tracing and proving the identity of all the unfortunate little ones.

California's "Man of Mystery."

The decision of Superior Judge Austin of Fresno county sustaining the will of M. Theo. Kearney bequeathing $1,400,000 to the University of California recalls one of the most notable characters and one of the impressive personalities who figured in the State from the early seventies until the time of his death which occurred few years ago. M. Theo. Kearney was a man of mystery from the time of his first appearance in the State which occurred in the later fifties or in the earlier seventies. His figure was tall and impressive, he was immaculate in dress, highly educated, a good conversationalist, a man of unquestionable breeding and a perfect gentleman, notable figure in any crowd, had entree in the best of California society, although he lacked personal magnetism, and commanded the respect of every one who knew him, and yet his origin and antecedents were concealed by an impenetrable veil. He first figured in San Francisco as the land agent of the late W. B. Chapman, then consul of The Netherlands in San Francisco, like his later namesake. Chapman became largely interested in lands in Fresno county, which was then sparsely settled and given up to sheep and cattle pasturing, and in carrying on his land speculations was a large borrower in the bank of California. When that institution failed in 1875 Chapman was caught in the maelstrom and his large San Joaquin valley holdings were absorbed, under circumstances, however, which resulted in a long and fruitless litigation. M. Theo. Kearney then became the agent of the bank for the disposition of the subdivided Chapman holdings. These embraced what were then known as "hog wallow" lands and were generally regarded in those days as of little agricultural value. But Kearney had undying faith in their value and possessed an unclosed foresight in the future. The colony he established on the Bank of California tract unfolded the future possibilities of the soil under intelligent treatment. This was particularly demonstrated on a small scale by a Miss Austin, a veteran teacher in the San Francisco schools, who resigned a lucrative position in the educational department of that city, to carve a comfortable home for herself in the then wilderness of Fresno country. But it remained for a retired stockbroker, Robert Burton, to demonstrate on a large scale Fresno county's viticultural possibilities. Following Burton's example, M. Theo. Kearney devoted his energies to the development of the raisin grape and was the chief agent in elevating Fresno county to the first rank which it holds today as a raisin producer. And out of nothing, practically, he developed the great inheritance to which the University of California has now fallen heir.

M. Theo. Kearney was a bachelor and when he died, so far as known, had no relatives. But after the probating of his will, the heirs of the one-time sandlot leader and organizer of the so-called workingmen's party of California, Denis Kearney, claimed relationship to the great estate and contested the will. Denis Kearney (he always insisted upon his given name being spelled the French way), had nothing physically, mentally or socially in common with M. Theo. Kearney. He was short stature, had spent the early part of his life at sea, subsequently became a drayman, was uncultured and uncouth and the last man in the world anyone would have suspected of being related to his refined and cultured namesake. And the claim of relationship was in all probability bogus for when it came to the point of submitting proof in the contest of the will they neglected to put in an appearance and judgment was rendered by default.

California has been remarkably fertile in the production of men of origin and veiled antecedents, but whose native and educated ability was transcendent and amply proved by their marked energy and intelligence, rising in wealth, influence and distinction through overpowering personal effort and keenness of foresight. Of this class M. Theo. Kearney, the man of mystery, was a most remarkable representative. As he lived, he died without revealing whether or not, as was always suspected, he was of English or French, or Irish aristocratic lineage; but whatever his origin and early history future generations of California's youths will reap the benefit of the fruits of his intelligence and enterprise.

The crusade for a five thousand membership of the Chamber of Commerce should succeed, as it doubtless will. If there is any man in the community capable of accomplishing the feat that man is the secretary of that influential body, Edwin Stearns, whose genial personality impresses every one with whom he comes in contact. No Chamber of Commerce in the country has become better known or is today exerting greater influence for its city's good than the Chamber of Commerce of Oakland and the greater number of its membership the greater benefit Oakland will derive from it. Stearns and the enterprising men he has gathered around him has made the organization a live, wide awake active and energetic body which is devoting itself on intelligent lines to advance Oakland's best interests and induce capital and population to seize the opportunities presented her for the upbuilding of the industries and commerce.

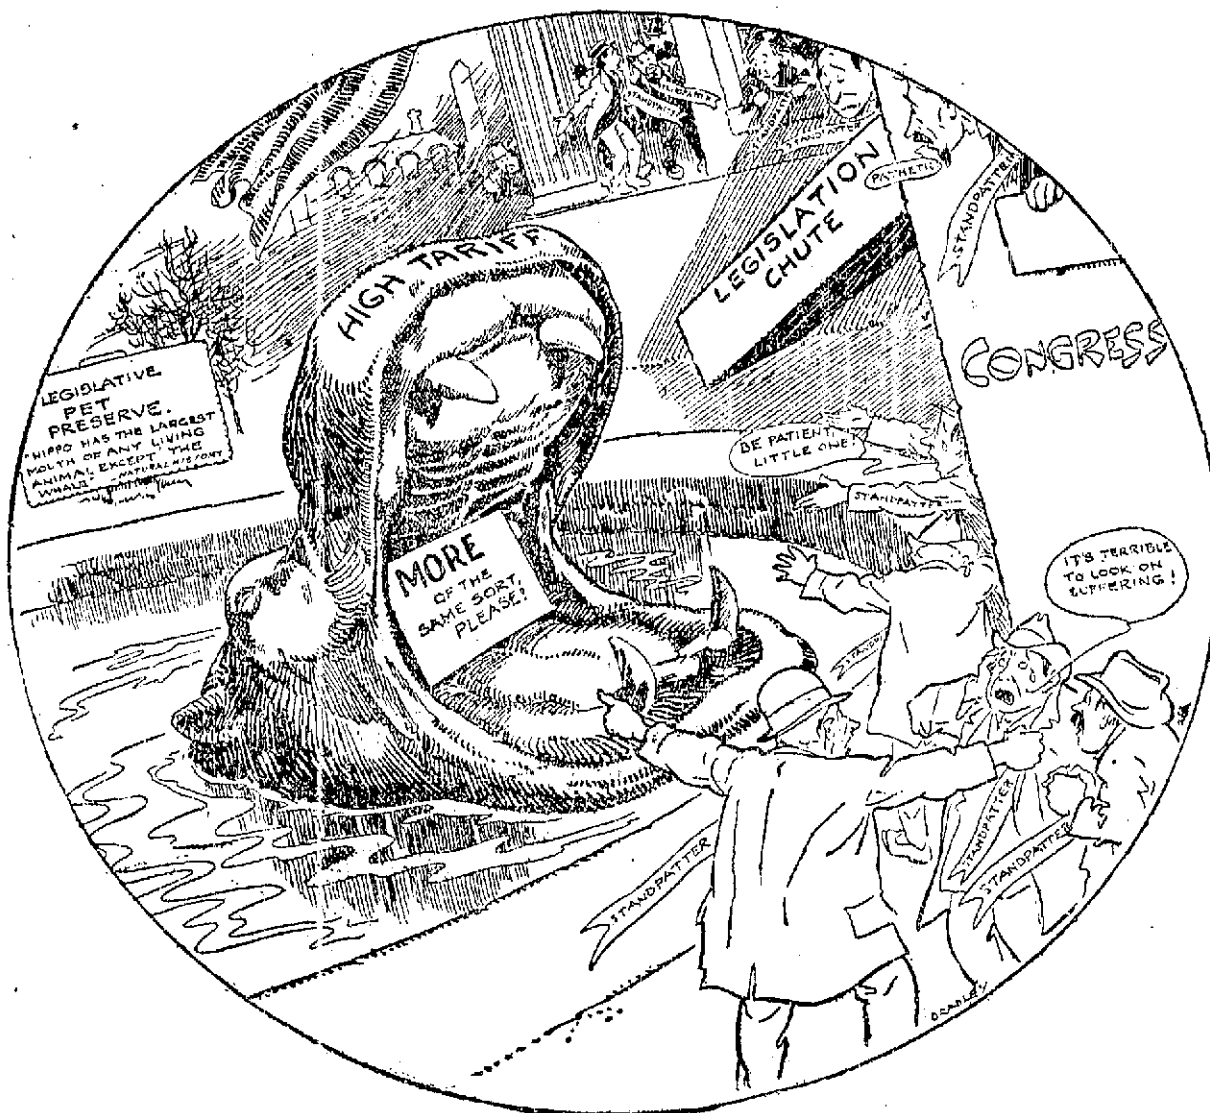

The dredging of Lake Merritt began this week in earnest and the spoil is being deposited on the unsightly marsh which is to form the site of one of the finest public playgrounds in the country. Oakland has waited long for the transformation, but it is coming now with a rush under the energetic policy which the municipal administration is carrying out. In another year the great benefits to the community which the change will produce and the immense influence it will exert in advancing the values of neighboring property will be in evidence. Later the tale of the value of such great improvements will be told in an increased assessment roll when the cost of the conversion will begin to be returned to the municipal treasury, principal and interest, and that perpetually.

The State University is taking up the task of educating the bakers of the State how to conduct their business on scientific and sanitary lines, as it is teaching the farmers and horticulturists how to utilize the land they till and the dairies they are conducting to the best advantage to themselves. The first university baker's day has been set for next Wednesday. It will be the first opportunity the bakers of California have ever had to learn, free of charge, how to analyze and test the goods they use in their calling and to ascertain the whys and wherefores results are produced, the reasons for which they are now in total ignorance. The course ought to be productive of much good not only to the trade, but to bread consumers also.

New York reports that the bill revising the Dingley tariff act has not materially affected the stock market, which is the strongest kind of evidence that it contains nothing revolutionary or damaging to the general welfare of the country.

A week of unbroken fine weather has demonstrated that the Oakland real estate market is buoyant and every one engaged in the business is looking to a season of unprecedented activity in trading this summer.

WASHINGTON'S SPRING OPENING

—CHICAGO DAILY NEWS.

Rotten Torpedo Boats Condemned.

The Navy Department has just ordered stricken from the naval list the names of the torpedo boats O'Brien and Nicholson. That means that both vessels will be broken up and pass into the junk yard. Under ordinary circumstances there would be nothing strange in this announcement, for the scrap heap is the final destiny of all vessels which escape the perils of the sea while serviceable. But the extraordinary thing about these two torpedo boats is that they are only four years old, having been launched from Nixon's Elizabethport, New Jersey, shipyard in 1905, and have done no more serious work than to be stationed at the reserve torpedo station. They are two astounding examples of "jerry-building" as it is done in the private yards of the Eastern shipbuilding trust which has been scheming and wire-pulling to prevent the government building its warships in its own yards. The trust put up a job on Secretary Newberry when he was at the head of the Navy Department and induced him to recommend that the second naval collier assigned by law to be constructed at Mare Island Navy Yard should be ordered built by Congress in the shipyards of the Cramps on the Delaware on the ground that they had offered to turn out the vessel at less than one-half the cost named in the act adopted over two years ago. The trick nearly succeeded. It probably would have succeeded if it had not been for the vigilance of Congressman Knowland and the energetic fight made by him and Senator Perkins. In the debate over the matter it developed that the low bid of the Cramps was based on new plans of a smaller sized collier than the one provided for in the act of Congress and inferior otherwise in all respect, and on that showing the amount allowed the navy yard was cut down to $900,000 in the civil appropriation bill passed at the last session. But the collier will be built at Mare Island all the same, and doubtless on the original plans, relying upon Congress at a future session providing for whatever deficit may exist to cover actual cost.

The exhibition of shoddy ship construction contained in the two four-year-old torpedo boats just condemned as worthless, is not the first time for similar examples of poor workmanship to be displayed in warships built for the government in private Eastern shipyards. Some of the battleships constructed in them in the past have been almost as scandalously short-lived as these two torpedo boats, and that fact had much to do in forcing the government to equip its navy yards in self-defense. Fortunately, no such scandal has applied to the private shipyards on the Pacific Coast in which warships have been built. They have made a uniform record for superior and durable workmanship in all of the naval vessels launched from their yards. The object lesson which the Nixon shipyard has furnished of rotten work in the construction of the condemned torpedo boats should not escape the notice of Congress and the Navy Department in their future dealings with the Eastern shipbuilding trust.

Oakland's growth is unabated. One of the most suggestive signs of the times is that contained in the active competition which exists for long leases of locations in the business quarter which a few years ago went a-begging. That means a continuous expansion of the business quarters.

Oakland's Clearing House record continues to show a satisfactory increase as compared with the corresponding period last year.

DOUGLAS TILDEN SAYS
DEAFMUTES DON'T BEG

Baiter Oakland TRIBUNE: There is a growing frequency of instances in which peddlers come to one's door and present, for sale, with the information that they are deaf and dumb. It takes me but a few seconds to post them as imposters, while it is quite impossible for the public to arrive from outward appearances at the same conclusion. There is nothing easier than to pose as a person who can neither hear nor speak. All he has to do is to keep his mouth shut.

I desire to explain that it is rare for a home-fide peddler to engage in the idle occupation of peddling small articles. The deafmutes are, as a class, industrious; they in nearly every case have wage-earning occupations; they attend strictly to their own business and do not parade their misfortune in order to incite pity. So jealous are they of good opinion on the part of the public that they will, even on any member of their class who is able-bodied enough to earn a living by labor but yet chooses the easier trade of selling a worthless article at 500 per cent profit, and they excuse such an occupation in a deafmute only if he has, in addition to the loss of hearing, some other physical disability.

The public will confer a favor by refusing to buy of a peddler who displays a card with these words: "I am deaf and dumb. God loves a cheerful giver." In case such a person calls at your office, say aloud to your clerk: "This fellow is an imposter. Go to the telephone and call the police," and see if the "deafmute" does not promptly beat for the door.

Respectfully yours,
DOUGLAS TILDEN.

Oakland, March 20, 1909.

OUT IN 'FRISCO

There is lots of time to turn
Out in 'Frisco;
There's a devil of a lot to learn
Out in 'Frisco;
Where they make their human matches
To end with single scratches
And husbands mix their latches
Out in 'Frisco.

There the red light is contagious,
Out in 'Frisco;
And their conduct is outrageous,
Out in 'Frisco;
In the famous French cafes,
With their naughty little ways,
That's the place where Cupid plays,
Out in 'Frisco.

You get next at Sanguinetti's,
Out in 'Frisco;
Where the girls forget their pretties,
Out in 'Frisco;
And the blood-red native wine
Mixes up the clinging vine,
And she calls you "Baby Mine,"
Out in 'Frisco.

Next day you meet at Zinkand's
Out in 'Frisco;
And you hold the dear girl's hands,
Out in 'Frisco;
Dry Martini, then another,
Then she telephones to mother
She'll take dinner with her brother,
Out in 'Frisco.

If in Poodle Dog a crowd—
Out in 'Frisco—
Disturbs your nerves with noises loud,
Out in 'Frisco;
You will go just one floor up,
And in privacy you'll sup,
Close beside your buttercup,
Out in 'Frisco.

Or if in the elevator,
Out in 'Frisco;
In parlance of the waiter,
Out in 'Frisco;
You more quiet wish to be,
You will ask to stop at three,
Just to see what you can see,
Out in 'Frisco.

There you find the rooms en suite—
Out in 'Frisco;
And the "outfits" hard to beat—
Out in 'Frisco;
But if your conscience becomes rife
Because it's another fellow's wife,
Just remember this is life,
Out in 'Frisco.

When you finally cash in
Out in 'Frisco;
And you end this life of sin,
Out in 'Frisco;
They will gently toll a bell,
Plant your carcass in a dell,
No need to go to hell,
You're in 'Frisco.

A private hotel containing thirty-three rooms with all modern conveniences is in the process of being erected between Jackson and Madison streets which was built by Fred Tate was recently sold through the office of D. I. Milroy to Edgar D. Duran at a local capitalist for $2,000. Mr. Duran was so well pleased with his purchase that as soon as the deeds were passed he bought the vacant lots adjoining on Jackson street through the same office at $75 per foot. This transaction speaks volumes for the stability of this district and the improvements being made in the immediate vicinity are increasing the value of the property very rapidly. Mr. Duran expects to construct a million building on the Jackson street in the near future.

$28.50—CHARMING SPRING SUITS—$28.50

A Truly Wonderful Showing of the Newest Two and Three-Piece Modes

THIRTY-FIVE DOLLARS would be a most apt price for any dress in the collection—some of the suits are worth even more. There are many styles to choose from. The coats are in this season's most proper lengths and are cutaway, sloping, straight, pointed or graduated at the bottom. They have flat, slot or patch pockets and buttons of jet, cloth, silk or fancy metal. Some are prettily ornamented, but the majority depend on their perfect lines and graceful curves for elegance. Fabrics are fine seiges, plain and fancy worsteds, satin-finished prunellas, silky striped venetians and panamas, and light weight broadcloths. We don't know of a single one of the lovely shades on the spring color card that is missing. A glance at these suits will delight the woman seeking a stylish, beautiful, yet inexpensive dress. A closer inspection of the splendid fabrics and the careful, honest tailoring will cause her to marvel that we can afford to sell such really elegant suits for $28.50

MISSES' $20.00 SUITS FOR $12.50

A Rare Bargain for Budding American Beauties

THE illustration at the right shows the natty cut of these dressy and becoming little suits. Note the graceful lines—the perfect fit—the dainty bit of trimming on the collar and cuffs—the cute little pockets—the buttons. Some of these are little things—but how a girl does prize them. Materials are strictly all-wool and the colors are the brightest and bonniest of the springtime. The suits would sell quickly enough at twenty dollars. But we want you to visit our Juvenile Department, which is fairly bulging with garments that will delight critical young wearers. Hence the special price of $12.50

ORDER OF SALE OF REAL ESTATE

[illegible]

Lady Washington=20c

The most commendable oil stock of the year. A favorable opportunity to make a safe, sane, sure, quick and profitable investment in a "proven ground" oil company.

In Oakland, California, there is a man who used to be a railroad brakeman. His income was less than one hundred dollars a month. This man invested a small portion of his savings, less than two hundred dollars, in California oil, and today he is one of the most influential citizens of that city; not only is he influential, but he is a millionaire. Money made his influence. With money he was able to travel, able to absorb an education and become the prominent member of society that he is today. This same opportunity is open to any man with the earnest desire to become better situated in life. Any man or woman with a little courage and a little cash can conscientiously invest in a good oil stock and have open before them just the same identical opportunity that this Oakland multi-millionaire had when he first invested. Not that every man who invests a few hundred dollars in oil will become a millionaire, but chances are greater in an oil investment than in any other industry known. Every man or woman who reads this advertisement, if he or she will stop and think for a moment, should readily call to mind a number of acquaintances, or people they know by reputation who have made their start in life or whose fortunes were founded on the oil industry of California. It is a reasonable wager that in your very block, or in the very building in which you may have offices, that there is some one who has at one time or other invested in the magic money-making possibility of oil and who is today reaping the rewards of their forethought and courage. The very building in which you are housed may have been paid for by oil profits.

Most merchants and manufacturers, most men who are successes in mercantile lines, are men who do not invest in outside enterprises as a rule. They leave the cotton market alone. They do not speculate in Wall street. But in California it would be hard to find a successful merchant or manufacturer who is not at present or who has been in the past interested in oil. The success of his business is not wholly due to his acute business ability in his given line, but to the fact that he was able to utilize more capital than his competitor without borrowing, and this money that made his business, and made his success, was gained by his investment in oil. These are facts not generally known, but it would not take much effort on your part to determine the truth of this statement. Just ask your banker or anyone acquainted with the doings of California finance, and they will coincide with these statements to the letter.

Investment in oil stocks in a proven territory, in a company that is actually operating and drilling wells on proven ground carries no element of chance. It is an out and out investment that is bound to, and will result in a profit to the investor, and this profit will be no mean one. The Lady Washington Oil Company offers today a possibility that is seldom met with in life. Let us set forth a few of the facts regarding this progressive company, and then let you reason out for yourself why this company offers a better opportunity for investment than any property yet promoted in this State. Here are the facts:

1. The company's capital stock is only $500,000. This is, for the record, about one-tenth the size of the capital stock of the average California company. That means that your return will be four times greater per share than were you in a company of two million capitalization, and six times greater than a $3,000,000 company.

2. Probably the most reliable and experienced men in the oil industry, especially those acquainted with the details and advancement of oil in California, are at the head and management of the Lady Washington concern. Of all the men operating in California, probably no others could have been chosen to better fit the positions which they now hold.

3. The location of the 80 acres under operation by the company is ideal. It is in the Sunset District, the oldest field in the country, and its recent production development speaks for its great and magnificent future.

4. The particular location of the Lady Washington Oil Co.'s property in this prosperous and productive district is also ideal, located at an elevation sufficient to permit the transportation of the oil direct to the railroad, close by, by gravity. This means no pumping, thus saving this expense generally borne by other producing companies. Then, too, the oil on the adjacent properties flows freely from the well without pumping; this means another saving of about 15 cents per barrel, all of which makes it possible to pay greater dividends than those companies in other districts. Combine these facts with small capitalization, and the answer is larger dividends.

5. The production of the Lady Washington Oil Company can be sold right at the property to either the Standard Oil Company or the Associated Oil Company, and an average of 50 cents or better can be had for it. This is a market condition, not a statement put forth by us for the purpose of selling this stock. Three hundred barrels a day from two wells—with comparatively no cost—at 50 cents a barrel will pay over 40 per cent dividends at the present selling prices. Each new well will add 20 per cent more, and 80 wells are possible.

6. Transportation almost at hand—the Southern Pacific line being but a few hundred yards away—makes the selling of the oil absolutely assured, and also guarantees the low cost of materials purchased to develop the property. That's an immediate benefit already enjoyed.

7. The owners of this valuable 80 acres have given a 20-year lease to the Lady Washington Oil Company without one dollar cash consideration, and not one dollar can be realized from the ground except from the royalty on the oil produced. This conclusively proves that the owners have a great faith in the management of the Lady Washington Oil Company, and their faith is not misplaced, because the hundreds of feet of development that have been steadily going on will yield to them in royalty sufficient to pay out big dividends on their early investment in this property. A 20-year lease is a long lease, and by that time as many wells as the property will stand will have been put down. The Lady Washington Company, under its lease, will also enjoy all of the oil, less its royalty, after 20 years from all the wells it has sunk, a condition very seldom met with in the oil industry. All of which means a life annuity of generous proportion for each and every stockholder.

8. The Lady Washington Oil Company has not only a small capitalization, but every share of stock is on the same basis. There was no preference stock in the beginning, nor will there be any in the end of this company. Every investor will share alike. Stop for a moment and endeavor to appreciate what this really means.

It is difficult in this advertisement to actually make you fully understand or comprehend the real importance of the development of this valuable property. It is hard to describe the truthful situation without what might seem exaggeration, and it is for this reason that the Lincoln Mortgage and Loan Company, the fiscal agent of this company, make the liberal offer that they do, to let you take any interested person to the property of the Lady Washington Oil Company, let them examine it for themselves; let them see the rapid development now going on; let them talk with and meet face to face the operators and field men on the property, and in this manner let them convince themselves that no more meritorious proposition has ever been put before the American people, especially one that has the great opportunities of great profits and these profits to be enjoyed in the very near future. These very field men and operators have purchased stock in the company, but will enjoy no other privilege than any other stockholder. Everyone has an even break.

The next was made by Mr. A. G. Nichols, Field Superintendent. Ask any old man in California about Mr. Nichols. We will abide by what he has to say. It covers Well No. 1:

Well No. 1, with a 12½-inch pipe, is now down 846 feet, and Well No. 2, with a 10-inch pipe, is down 1293 feet. And there is oil, and great quantities of it, waiting below the surface of these wells, waiting only for a few hundred more feet to reach it. Then two wells will come in that will make the stock of the Lady Washington Oil Company will immediately jump to one dollar or more per share, and this for your benefit. Twenty cents a share is the price now. But let us not linger on the merits of this property. Let us put the proposition up to you. Do you want to lay to the property, do you want to personally examine it? Do you want to see every dollar of your expense there and back without an obligation on your part? We will take you there, let you examine as you please; then, when you return, if you are not satisfied, don't buy one dollar's worth of stock in this property. No obligation on your part; we pay all the way. Pretty fair, do you want to go? The following report should at least convince you of the sincerity of our words, and further convince you that it would be worth your while to take this trip at our expense:

"On No. 1 work is going steadily at something like 846 feet. I hope to get the 12½-inch pipe to at least 900 feet, and possibly 1000, in this well. This will insure us a well with the depth, and possibly with the ten. As we go deeper there the formation looks more favorable all the time. It is identical with the formation in the big wells farther up in the field, except that each stratum is somewhat thicker. For instance, it is a little deeper to the surface water and we get a little more surface water. The top stratum of clay was a little thicker than in the Fulton wells, and the bottom stratum will probably be still thicker. It is, therefore, entirely reasonable to suppose that the oil-bearing stratum will also be thicker and that the oil will be lighter and probably contain more gas, so that where the Fultons get from 200 to 300 barrels, there is no reason why we should not get from 300 to 400. However, as I told you before, I will be entirely satisfied with 100, as a well that will produce 100 barrels of oil every day will more than pay dividends on the entire capital stock of the company for one well, but we will have two wells there probably within two months, and knowing the formation, as we will then, it will not take us anywhere near as long to get down other wells as it does these first two."

Here is what Mr. L. A. Ross, drilling superintendent, has to say about Well No. 2:

"We have laid 100 feet of 10-inch pipe in the hole now and everything working fine. We have not had to drive any yet; the pipe is hanging free and going easy."

"The formation is the same as in the wells west of us, and I would not give anyone a dollar to insure our getting oil."

Don't these reports satisfy? If not, make one of your own at our expense.
